Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 1: Introduction

The purpose of this manual is to assist anyone who may be involved in the protection order process in Kansas. This manual addresses protection orders issued through the Protection From Abuse Act (K.S.A. 60-3101 et seq.) and the Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault, or Human Trafficking Act (K.S.A. 60-31a01 et seq.). Since this manual is available statewide, the primary focus is on statutory law as well as best practices developed and learned by those involved in this field. Recent and pertinent Kansas case law is provided and is located in the Kansas Law section of this manual.

Understanding the local practices in your area is essential. The protection order process looks different in nearly every court in the state. Local programs and courts do things differently, and the process will be easier and possibly more successful for the victim accessing it if those assisting them understand local practices.

▲ A Note on Language

“Survivor” vs. “Victim”

- Throughout this manual, the term “survivor” will be used in addition to the term “victim.” The use of the term “survivor” is a way of promoting the strength, courage, and survival strategies of those who have experienced domestic and sexual violence.
- It is important to recognize that not all people who have experienced these kinds of assaults see themselves as “survivors.” When working with someone interested in filing a protection order, use language that is comfortable for that individual.

Section 1: Introduction

The Power and Control Wheel

As described by the Domestic Abuse Intervention Project in Duluth, Minnesota, the Power and Control Wheel diagram serves as tactics abusive partners use to keep survivors in a relationship. The inside of the wheel makes up subtle, continual behaviors over time, while the outer ring represents physical and sexual violence. Thus, abusive actions like those depicted in the outer ring reinforce the regular use of other, more subtle methods found in the inner ring.

▲ What is Domestic Violence?

Domestic violence is a pattern of abusive and coercive behavior used to gain and maintain power and control over an intimate partner or former intimate partner. Abusive and coercive behavior can include physical violence, sexual violence, emotional and psychological abuse, verbal abuse, and economic abuse. These behaviors result in fear for the safety of the victim. Domestic violence victims often feel threatened physically, spiritually and/or emotionally by the abuser. People who abuse utilize physical and sexual violence and threats of violence to “enforce” the control they establish. Battering is a chosen behavior, often committed out of sight of others to avoid detection. It is not a mental illness, behavior disorder or anger management problem.

Types of abuse include:

- Physical Violence
- Sexual Violence
- Emotional/Verbal Abuse
- Intimidation and Threats
- Exploitation of Privilege
- Isolation
- Economic Control
- Threatening Children and Loved Ones
- Minimization, Denial and Blame

▲ What is Stalking?

The civil legal definition of stalking is the “intentional harassment of another person that places the other person in reasonable fear for that person’s safety.”

Harassment is a “knowing and intentional course of conduct directed at a specific person that seriously alarms, annoys, torments or terrorizes the person, and that serves no legitimate purpose.”

Stalking must include a “course of conduct” on the part of the stalker, consisting of two or more separate acts over a period of time, however short, showing a “continuity of purpose” that would cause a reasonable person to suffer substantial emotional distress.

Are you being stalked?

- If you believe you are in danger, consider what might be safe places for you to go, such as: police stations, residences unknown to the stalker, domestic violence shelters, churches, or public areas where the stalker might be less inclined to cause a disturbance and call 911.
- Document the stalking, including times, dates, locations, witnesses, and photos.
- Keep a list of important telephone numbers readily available.
- Formulate a safety plan, which can include keeping extra necessities at another location and contacting critical people about the stalking.

▲ What is Sexual Assault?

The civil legal definition of sexual assault is any non-consensual sexual act; or an attempted sexual act against another by force, threat of force, duress or when the person is incapable of giving consent.

Sexual Assault Can Include:

- Unwanted sexual touching or contact;
- Penetration (penile, digital, or with any other object);
 - Vaginal, anal, or oral;
- Any sexual touching of a minor (under 16 years old).

▲ What is Consent?

- Freely given. Consenting is a choice you make without pressure, manipulation, or under the influence of drugs or alcohol.
- Reversible. Anyone can change their mind about what they feel like doing, anytime. Even if you've done it before, and even if you're both naked in bed.

Section 2: Important Definitions

- Informed. You can only consent to something if you have the full story. For example, if someone says they'll use a condom and then they don't, there isn't full consent.
- Enthusiastic. When it comes to sex, you should only do stuff you WANT to do, not things that you feel you're expected to do.
- Specific. Saying yes to one thing (like going to the bedroom to make out) doesn't mean you've said yes to others (like having sex).
- Consent CANNOT be given if:
 - a person is incapacitated or unconscious because of drugs or alcohol;
 - a person is under 16 years of age;
 - an individual has a cognitive or mental disability severe enough to make them incapable of consenting;
 - a person is in fear for their safety or wellbeing.

▲ What is Human Trafficking?

- The civil legal definition of a “human trafficking victim” is an individual who has been exposed to any of the following acts, situations, or behaviors:
 - The intentional recruitment, harboring, transportation, provision or obtaining of a person for labor services through the use of force, fraud or coercion for the purposes of subjecting the person to involuntary servitude or forced labor;
 - Intentionally benefiting financially or by receiving anything of value from participating in a venture that the person has reason to know has engaged in the acts set forth [above];
 - Knowingly coercing employment by obtaining or maintaining labor or services that are performed or provided by another person through any of the following:
 - Causing or threatening to cause physical injury to any person;

Section 2: Important Definitions

- Physically restraining or threatening to physically restrain another person;
- Abusing or threatening to abuse the law or legal process;
- Threatening to withhold food, lodging or clothing; or
- Knowingly destroying, concealing, removing, confiscating or possessing any actual or purported government identification of another person; or
- Knowingly holding another person in a condition of peonage in satisfaction of a debt owed the person who is holding such other person.
- “Aggravated human trafficking.” Defined as:
 - Human trafficking, involving the commission or attempted commission of kidnapping;
 - Human trafficking, committed in whole or in part for the purpose of the sexual gratification of another;
 - Recruiting, harboring, transporting, providing or obtaining, by any means, a child knowing that the child, with or without force, fraud, threat or coercion, will be used to engage in:
 - Forced labor;
 - Involuntary servitude;
 - Sexual gratification of another involving the exchange of anything of value; or
 - Hiring a child by giving, or offering or agreeing to give, anything of value to any person, to engage in manual or other bodily contact, stimulation of the genitals of any person with the intent to arouse or gratify the sexual desires of the offender or another, sexual intercourse, sodomy, or any unlawful sexual act, and the offender recklessly disregards the age of the child.

Section 2: Important Definitions

- “Commercial sexual exploitation of a child.” Defined as:
 - Knowingly hiring a person younger than 18 years of age by giving, or offering or agreeing to give, anything of value to any person, to engage in a manual or other bodily contact stimulation of the genitals of any person with the intent to arouse or gratify the sexual desires of the offender or another, sexual intercourse, sodomy, or any unlawful sexual act.

[If the victim is under the age of 18] “An act that, if committed by an adult would constitute selling sexual relations.” is defined as:

- Performing for hire, or offering or agreeing to perform for hire, where there is an exchange of value, any of the following acts:
 - Sexual intercourse;
 - Sodomy; or
 - Manual or other bodily contact stimulation of the genitals of any person with the intent to arouse or gratify the sexual desires of the offender or another.

Have you been the victim of human trafficking?

- Sex trafficking has been found to occur in a wide variety of venues within the sex industry such as: residential brothels, escort services, fake massage businesses, strip clubs, and street prostitution.¹
- Labor trafficking has also been found to occur in diverse settings, such as: domestic work, small businesses, large farms, and factories.²

1 Human Trafficking Hotline, humantraffickinghotline.org/type-trafficking/human-trafficking.

2 Id.

Section 2: Important Definitions

- Some of the common indicators of human trafficking include:
 - Not being free to leave or come and go as you wish;
 - Having a pimp/manager who controls your finances;
 - Working for no or little money or being paid only through tips;
 - Working excessively long or unusual hours;
 - Owing a large debt that you are unable to pay off;
 - Being recruited through false promises concerning the conditions or nature of your work;
 - Being denied access to medical services or medical care by your employer/pimp/manager/significant other;
 - Being denied access to food, water, or other daily necessities;
 - Being subjected to physical and/or sexual abuse, physical restraint, confinement, or torture;
 - Lack of control over your own money;
 - Having to turn over your identification documents (ID or passport, visa etc.) to your employer/pimp/manager/significant other.

If you believe you are in danger, consider what might be safe places for you to go, such as: police stations, residences unknown to the trafficker, domestic violence shelters, churches, or public areas where the trafficker might be less inclined to make a disturbance and call 911.

NOTE: Even if you initially consented to be in a situation or were informed about what type of labor you would be doing, or that commercial sex would be involved, you are still entitled to withdraw that consent at any time. Your initial consent is not relevant to the crime of human trafficking.

Safety Planning

This grant project is supported by the State General Fund for Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault as administered by the Kansas Governor's Grants Program. The opinions, findings, conclusions, or recommendations expressed in this publication, program, or exhibition are those of the author(s) and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Office of the Kansas Governor.

The first step in the protection order process is deciding whether to seek an order. Applying for a protection order is a step towards independence, which can threaten an abuser/stalker/trafficker's sense of power and control, therefore possibly increasing the danger of violence or risk of death for the victim.

If the victim decides to file a petition for a protection order, it is imperative that they understand that the protection order is only one piece of comprehensive safety planning. Safety planning helps develop tools in advance of potentially dangerous situations. Sexual and domestic violence advocates can help victims with their safety planning. The Kansas Coalition Against Sexual and Domestic Violence has published a safety planning brochure which can be found online at www.kcsdv.org. Every safety plan should be unique to the situation of the victim and include only the suggestions that make sense for a victim's given situation. For safety reasons, these plans are not usually written down.

There are three important questions to ask a victim as they consider filing a petition for a protection order:

Are they eligible?

Do they think it will make them safer?

How might a protection order negatively affect them?

1. Are they eligible?

While the Protection From Abuse Act (PFAA) was created “to promote the protection of victims of domestic violence from bodily injury or threats of bodily injury and to facilitate access to judicial protection for victims,”¹ and the Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault, or Human Trafficking Act (PFSSAHTA) was created “to protect victims of stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking and to facilitate access to judicial protection for stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking victims,”² not all those who would be considered victims in the greater sense of the terms “domestic violence,” “sexual assault,” “stalking”, or “human trafficking” will qualify for a protection order. According to the PFAA, there must be a specific type of relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant and type of abuse in order for the plaintiff to qualify for a protection from abuse order. Some power and control tactics commonly associated with domestic and sexual violence are not included in the definition of abuse under the Act. While they might help prove the statutorily required abuse, emotional or mental abuse by itself, for example, will not satisfy the statutory requirement for protection order. The PFSSAHT does not set out any specific type of relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant but does require specific behavior to have occurred; such as: at least two incidents of stalking, OR one incident of sexual assault, OR one incident of human trafficking.

Section 3: Safety Planning

2. Do they think it will make them safer?

It is extremely important for the victim to decide whether the protection order might make them safer. Often people assume that a legal remedy is the best route to take. Sometimes, however, the protection order does not enhance the person’s safety, and could increase the likelihood of them being harmed or even killed by the abuser. The time during which a victim tries to separate from the abuser and assert their independence can often be the period where there is an increased risk of violence. The victim should carefully consider whether the order might make them safer and consider additional safety planning no matter what choice they ultimately make. The victim knows the respondent best and is the expert on what they think the abuser may do. Some questions to ask the victim are the following:

1 K.S.A. 60-3101(b)(2005).

2 K.S.A. 60-31a01(b)(2005).

- Have you had a protection order against this person before?
- Was it helpful?
- How did they respond to the prior order?
- Have they had prior orders issued against them by a different individual? If so, how did they respond?
- How are protection orders enforced in your area?
- What is the response time by law enforcement to a call about a violation?
 - Are they in a very rural area that might delay law enforcement response time?
- Have they threatened violence if you file for a protection order or a divorce?
- Do you think an order will make you safer?

3. How might a protection order negatively affect victims?

There are often significant economic and emotional impacts on the victim if they file for a protection order and/or when the order is issued. Some questions to ask the victim are the following:

- It could be difficult to talk about your experience in court. What would worry you about telling your story in court?
- Have you considered contacting an attorney? What assistance might you need with this?
- Are you considering this as a step that may lead to divorce or custody proceedings? If so, what assistance would you need for an attorney for these cases?

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 3: Safety Planning

- What other concerns do you have if an order were to be granted? Some people worry about loss of financial resources, loss of a residence, costs for the children, loss of transportation, and other costs for needs that may have been shared.
- Do you have a plan for handling these economic implications?

It is important that anyone who is working with the victim discuss any and all implications that the protection order may have for them and/or their children before they make the decision to file for a protection order.

REMEMBER, the victim is the best person to decide what will keep them safe but having a conversation with them about safety is critical before moving forward with a protection order.

SECTION

This grant project is supported by the State General Fund for Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault as administered by the Kansas Governor's Grants Program. The opinions, findings, conclusions, or recommendations expressed in this publication, program, or exhibition are those of the author(s) and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Office of the Kansas Governor.

A protection order is a court order that prohibits a party from engaging in certain conduct in order to protect another. Protection From Abuse (PFA) and Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault, or Human Trafficking (PFSSAHT) orders are specific types of protection orders intended to increase the safety of victims of sexual violence, domestic violence, stalking, and human trafficking. These orders, however, are not right for everyone. Many people within the community may encourage victims of sexual and domestic violence, stalking, or human trafficking to obtain a protection order, such as family members, social workers, neighbors, friends, or law enforcement. Unfortunately, not everyone who needs a protection order will qualify and not everyone who qualifies should file for one. Before a victim petitions for a protection order, a sexual or domestic violence advocate or an attorney should assist them in deciding whether the benefits of a protection order outweigh the risks. A protection order should always be used in conjunction with a broader safety plan to decrease the likelihood that the abuser will further harm the victim and/or their children.

▲ Considerations When Thinking of Filing a Protection Order

Interaction with Other Legal Proceedings

Victims involved in the protection order process often find themselves involved in other aspects of the legal system as well. For example, there may be a divorce or child custody case pending, a criminal case for the domestic violence, stalking, sexual assault, human trafficking, or violation of a protective order, or there may be a Child in Need of Care (CINC) case pending. All of these cases might have their own types of protection orders issued. It is important for the victim to realize that it is possible for multiple orders to be issued by different courts: criminal, civil or domestic, and district or municipal courts. The victim may need different attorneys for different cases, and there will often be multiple judges and courts involved. The victim should keep track of the case number of each case, the name and location of the issuing court, and the specific orders issued.

Interaction between Divorce/Paternity and PFA Orders

K.S.A. 60-3107(c) describes when orders issued in protection from abuse, divorce, and paternity cases may be modified or be inconsistent with each other.

Ex parte application in a divorce or paternity action

- May NOT modify an existing PFA order

Motion for temporary orders in a divorce or paternity action

- May NOT modify an existing PFA order

PFA Order

- May modify existing divorce or paternity orders
 - For matters subject to modification in divorce and parentage proceedings. (child support, child custody, and residency), AND
 - On sworn testimony to support a showing of good cause.
 - Good cause includes the immediate and present danger of abuse to the plaintiff or minor children.

Final Divorce Orders

- May be inconsistent with an existing PFA order or a current proceeding under the PFA, but it must
 - Be specific in terms,
 - Reference the PFA order and the parts to be modified, and
 - A copy should be filed in both actions.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 4: Protection Order Basics

Kansas code for care of children or Kansas juvenile justice code custody or parenting time orders

- Shall be binding and take precedent over PFA until the order is terminated.
 - Any inconsistent custody or parenting order issued shall
 - Be specific in terms,
 - Reference any preexisting protection from abuse order and the custody being modified, and
 - A copy of the order shall be filed in the PFA case.

Consolidation of Cases

The PFAA permits that a protection order case may be consolidated with a divorce or custody case. If the above actions involve the same issues or circumstances (a common question of law or fact) or are pending in the same or different counties in the same judicial district, the judge may order a joint hearing or trial of any or all of the matters at issue in the action, may order all actions consolidated, and may make such orders on those proceedings to avoid unnecessary costs or delay.

Even if the cases are consolidated, the PFA order should be a separate order on the Judicial Council approved order forms within the divorce or custody case and not just included in the journal entry for divorce. A PFA order is different than a restraining order in a divorce, extending past the divorce proceedings, and provides for greater protections and easier enforcement.¹

1 Myers v. Myers, No. 92,628, 2005 WL 1500923 (Kan. Ct. App. June 24, 2005).

There are safety considerations to think about before consolidating cases together. Be sure to speak to an advocate or attorney about these safety concerns before the protection order hearing.

▲ Types of Protection Orders

There is more than one type of protection order that may be issued by the court. This manual focuses on PFA and PFSSAHT orders, but it is important to understand that other protection orders may also arise. The protections provided by these different orders vary and therefore an understanding of these orders can be important to evaluate a victim's case. These other orders include:

- Interlocutory Order in a Divorce: A civil order issued as part of a divorce, annulment, or separate maintenance action.² This order restrains “the parties from molesting or interfering with the privacy rights of each other” and may also be called a “restraining order,” “temporary restraining order,” or a “TRO.”
- Order Issued in a Child in Need of Care (CINC) Case: a restraining order issued by a judge in a CINC case for the protection of a child or a parent.³
- Order Issued in a Criminal Case: an order issued as a condition of pretrial release, diversion, probation, suspended sentence, post release supervision, or at any time during the criminal case that orders the person to refrain from having any direct or indirect contact with another person, generally the victim of the underlying crime. These orders are often called “no contact orders.”

³ K.S.A. 2018 Supp. 38-2242(c)(1)(A), (e), 38-2243(g)(1)(A), (h), K.S.A. 38-2244(e), K.S.A. 2018 Supp. 38-2255(d)(4).

Protection From Abuse: Who is Eligible and What Qualifies?

To qualify for a protection from abuse order, the parties must be intimate partners or household members.

- This means people who are or have been in a dating relationship, reside or have formerly resided together, or have a child in common.
- “Dating Relationship” means a social relationship of a romantic nature. This relationship shall be presumed if the victim verifies that it exists, such as by alleging it in the signed petition. It is then up to the defendant to allege that the relationship does not exist. If the defendant does deny the relationship, the court shall consider the following factors: the nature of the relationship, the length of time the relationship existed, the frequency of interaction between the parties, and the time since the termination of the relationship as well as any other factors the court deems relevant.
- A parent or an adult living with the child may seek an order on behalf of that child.
 - As of July 2018, a court-appointed custodian or a court-appointed legal guardian may also seek an order on behalf of a minor.
 - If seeking an order on behalf of a minor child based on certain sexual acts with the defendant, the minor must be under 16 years of age and not the spouse of the defendant. The defendant must have abused the plaintiff.

The defendant must have abused the victim. The PFA defines “abuse” as follows:

- Intentionally attempting to cause bodily injury;
- Intentionally or recklessly causing bodily injury;
- Intentionally placing, by physical threat, another in fear of imminent bodily injury;
- Engaging in any sexual contact or attempted sexual contact with another person without consent or when such person is incapable of giving consent; or

Section 4: Protection Order Basics

- Engaging in any of the following acts with a minor under the age of 16 who is not the spouse of the offender:
 - Sexual intercourse; or
 - Any lewd fondling or touching of the person of either the minor or the offender, done or submitted to with the intent to arouse or to satisfy the sexual desires of either the minor or the offender, or both.

It is important to recognize that there is a required intent involved in the act to be considered abuse. Therefore, it is important that the victim be prepared to explain why they believe the abuser acted intentionally or recklessly.

Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault, or Human Trafficking: Who is Eligible and What Qualifies?

The PFSSAHT does not require that the parties have any specific relationship. Any victim of stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking may be eligible for a PFSSAHT Order.⁴

In July of 2017, the law was changed to provide protection for victims of sexual assault. Previously, there had been a gap in protection for victims of sexual assault in Kansas. The Protection From Abuse order requires that the parties be intimate partners or household members. Many sexual assault survivors are victims of non-intimate partner sexual assault. This could include sexual assault committed by strangers, acquaintances, neighbors, co-workers, or relatives. The Protection From Stalking order requires that intentional harassment take place over a period of time, and statute describes this as a course of conduct consisting of two or more separate acts. A victim of sexual assault would not qualify for a PFA if their perpetrator is not an intimate partner or household member. They would also not qualify if they could not prove two or more separate acts. It was not until July of 2017 that victims of sexual assault with these circumstances had a remedy available to them to seek a Protection From Stalking order.

4 K.S.A. 60-31a02 (2017).

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 4: Protection Order Basics

The law was changed again in July of 2018 to include protection for victims of human trafficking. K.S.A. 60-31a01 et seq. now provides victims of human trafficking with an order of protection in the state of Kansas. The statute does not require any intimate relationship between the parties and only requires the victim to show, by a preponderance of the evidence, that they have been the victim of human trafficking. Updated forms are available online at www.kscourts.org or from the clerk of the district court.

When filing a petition for a Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault, or Human Trafficking order, the victim must prove by a preponderance of the evidence, or more likely than not, that the alleged acts of stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking occurred. The PFSSAHTA defines “human trafficking,” “sexual assault,” and “stalking” and their elements as follows:⁵

- Human trafficking: any act that would constitute human trafficking or aggravated human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation of a child, or an act that, if committed by an adult, would constitute selling sexual relations.
- The civil legal definition of a “human trafficking victim” is an individual who has been exposed to any of the following acts, situations, or behaviors:⁶
 - The intentional recruitment, harboring, transportation, provision or obtaining of a person for labor services through the use of force, fraud, or coercion for the purposes of subjecting the person to involuntary servitude or forced labor;

Section 4: Protection Order Basics

- Intentionally benefiting financially or by receiving anything of value from participating in a venture that the person has reason to know has engaged in the acts set forth [above];
- Knowingly coercing employment by obtaining or maintaining labor or services that are performed or provided by another person through any of the following:
 - Causing or threatening to cause physical injury to any person;
 - Physically restraining or threatening to physically restrain another person;
 - Abusing or threatening to abuse the law or legal process;
 - Threatening to withhold food, lodging or clothing; or
 - Knowingly destroying, concealing, removing, confiscating or possessing any actual or purported government identification of another person; or
- Knowingly holding another person in a condition of peonage in satisfaction of a debt owed the person who is holding such other person.
- “Aggravated human trafficking.” Defined as:
 - Human trafficking, involving the commission or attempted commission of kidnapping;
 - Human trafficking, committed in whole or in part for the purpose of the sexual gratification of another;
 - Recruiting, harboring, transporting, providing or obtaining, by any means, a child knowing that the child, with or without force, fraud, threat or coercion, will be used to engage in:
 - Forced labor;
 - Involuntary servitude; or

- Sexual gratification of another involving the exchange of anything of value; or
 - Hiring a child by giving, or offering or agreeing to give, anything of value to any person, to engage in manual or other bodily contact, stimulation of the genitals of any person with the intent to arouse or gratify the sexual desires of the offender or another, sexual intercourse, sodomy, or any unlawful sexual act, and the offender recklessly disregards the age of the child.
- “Commercial sexual exploitation of a child.” Defined as:
- Knowingly hiring a person younger than 18 years of age by giving, or offering or agreeing to give, anything of value to any person, to engage in a manual or other bodily contact stimulation of the genitals of any person with the intent to arouse or gratify the sexual desires of the offender or another, sexual intercourse, sodomy, or any unlawful sexual act;
 - Establishing, owning, maintaining or managing any property, whether real or personal, where sexual relations are being sold or offered for sale by a person younger than 18 years of age, or participating in the establishment, ownership, maintenance or management thereof; or
 - Permitting any property, whether real or personal, partially or wholly owned or controlled by the defendant to be used as a place where sexual relations are being sold or offered for sale by a person who is younger than 18 years of age.⁷

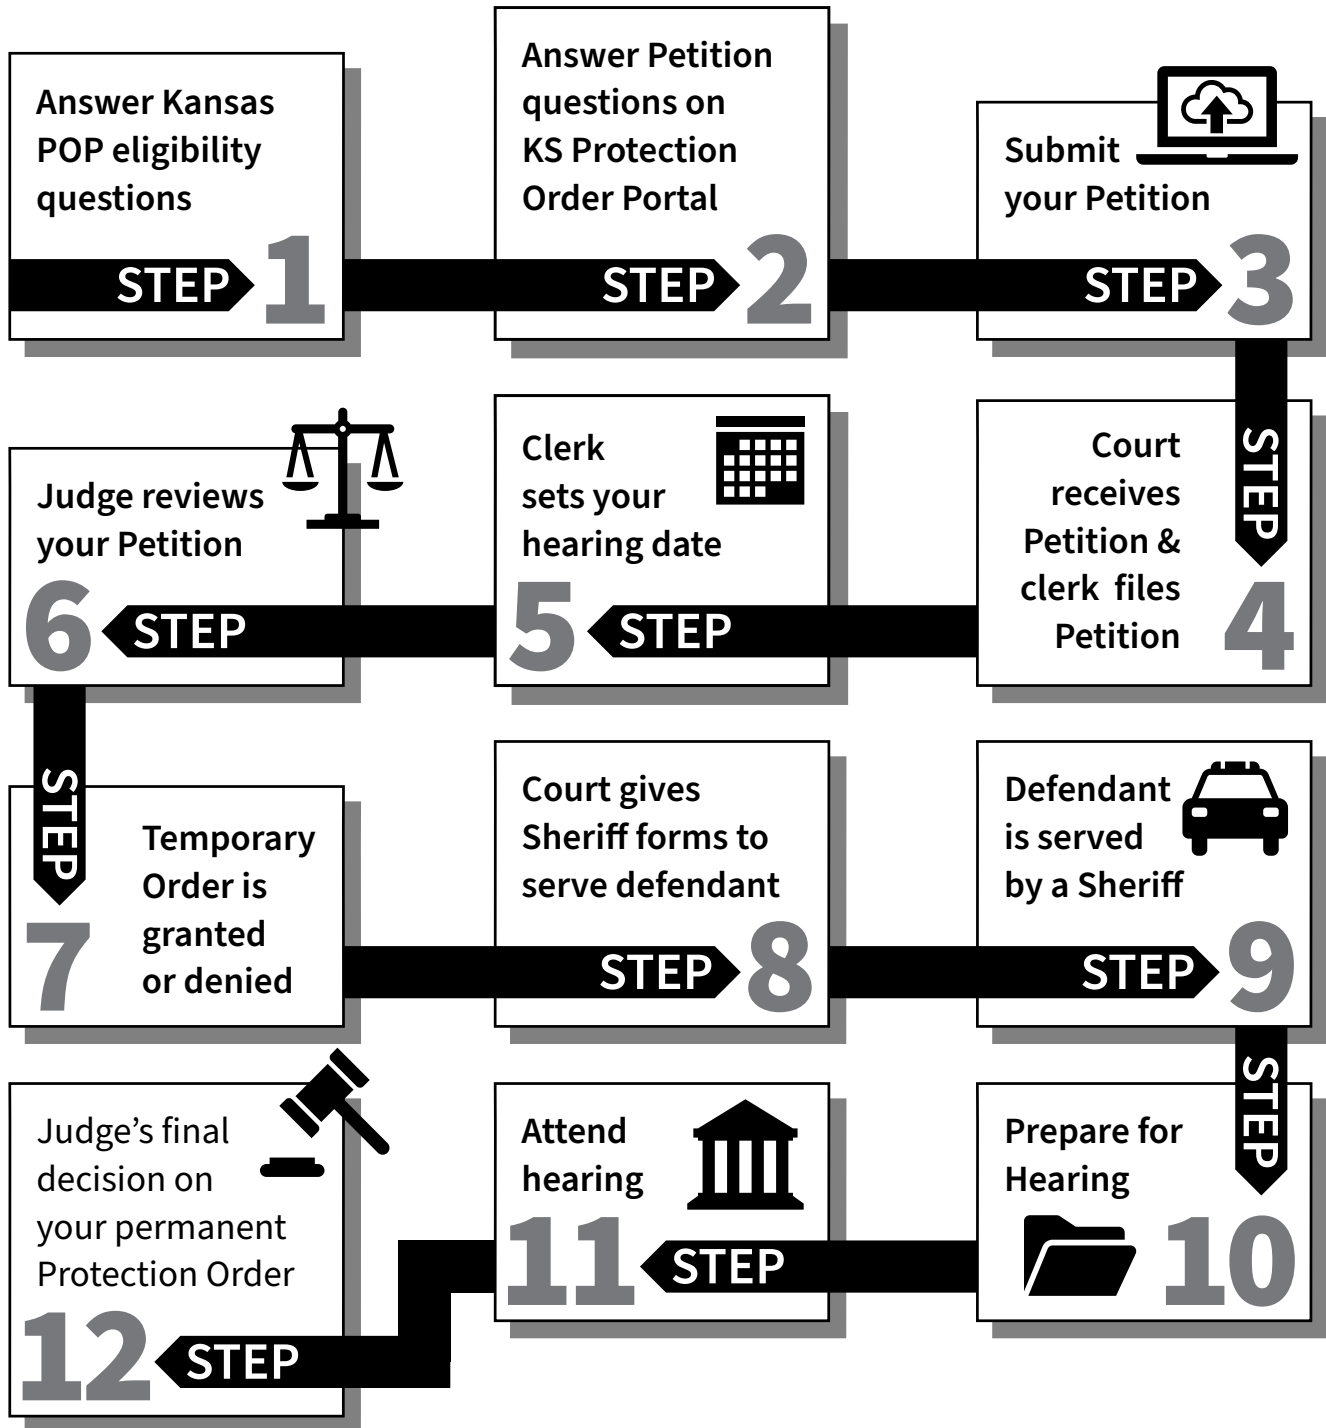

NOTE: If the victim is 18 years or older and petitioning for a Protection from Human Trafficking Order for themselves, they must be able to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that their exposure to the human trafficking incident was due to force, fraud, or coercion.

7 K. S. A. 21-6422 (a)

Section 4: Protection Order Basics

- Sexual assault: a non-consensual sexual act; or an attempted sexual act against another by force, threat of force, duress or when the person is incapable of giving consent.
- Stalking: an intentional harassment of another person that places the other person in reasonable fear for that person's safety.
 - The victim must be prepared to explain to the court that they are in fear for their safety and why that fear is reasonable. Kansas courts have held that the reasonableness of the plaintiff's fear is based on a totality of the circumstances, including what a reasonable person having experienced what the victim had experienced with the defendant would find fearful.
- Harassment: a knowing and intentional course of conduct directed at a specific person that seriously alarms, annoys, torments, or terrorizes the person, and that serves no legitimate purpose. "Harassment" shall include any course of conduct carried out through the use of an unmanned aerial system over or near any dwelling, occupied vehicle or other place where one may reasonably expect to be safe from uninvited intrusion or surveillance.
 - The victim should be prepared to argue that the conduct was knowing and intentional and that it served no legitimate purpose. It is important to remember that the Kansas Legislature included very strong words like torment and terrorize to express the feelings that the stalking creates in the victim; therefore, the victim should be prepared to explain why it is that they felt this way.
- Course of Conduct: conduct consisting of two or more separate acts over a period of time, however short, evidencing a continuity of purpose which would cause a reasonable person to suffer substantial emotional distress. Constitutionally protected activity is not included within the meaning of "course of conduct."
 - Remember, one act, no matter how bad, is not enough to qualify as stalking. Therefore, it is important for the plaintiff to keep track of every incident that could be considered an act of stalking.

▲ Where to File (Venue)?

Protection From Abuse

“Venue” generally means the county where a petition can be filed. The PFAA says that the verified petition may be filed with any district judge or clerk of the court.⁸ The Kansas Court of Appeals in Kreger v. Kreger, held that the PFAA’s specific conferring of jurisdiction to “any district court” also necessarily conferred venue to any district court as well.⁹ The court found this interpretation to be in line with the legislative declaration that the PFAA must be “liberally construed to promote the protection of victims ... from threats of bodily injury and to facilitate access to judicial protection for victims.”¹⁰

Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault, or Human Trafficking

The PFSSAHTA, previously known as the PFSSA stated that a plaintiff must file a verified petition with the district judge or clerk of the court in the county where the stalking occurred.¹¹ This is no longer the case. A petition can be filed in any district court; however, a petition filed on behalf of a minor must still be brought in the county where the stalking occurred.¹²

Current state law states there is no docket fee. However, local sheriff offices may charge a processing or service fee. If such a fee is assessed, contact your local DV/SA member program to have support and advocacy against the fee.

Kansas Protection Order Portal

- Kansas Protection Order Portal (KSPOP) is a Kansas court funded online portal with the purpose of allowing persons who seek a protection from abuse, stalking, sexual assault and/or human trafficking order to file online. The portal is free, and the protection order petitions can be completed on mobile devices.
- The portal does not replace the existing ways to file for a protection order. A survivor can still access protection order forms from their local courthouse, the Kansas Judicial Council website, and the KCSDV program members.
- The KCSDV member program advocates continue to play a vital role in assisting survivors with filing protection orders safely. An additional safety planning resource survivors can access is the online interactive Guided Interview module, which is available on the KCSDV website to assist the survivor in determining if a protection order is right for them.
- The Guided Interview explains important safety concerns, necessary qualifications, court processes, possible relief, resources, and other considerations a survivor should consider before seeking a protection order.

▲ Pro Se Litigants: Where to Get a Blank Petition?

The petition for both a PFA order and a PFSSAHT order can be obtained from the court clerk or online.¹³ Though it is preferable that victims be represented by legal counsel, it is not required. Additionally, most local sexual and domestic violence advocacy programs have copies of the forms and are able to assist pro se victims with the process of getting a protection order.

▲ Is There a Limit on How Many Times a Person Can File a Protection Order?

The PFAA previously stated that, “[n]o person may use the procedure provided for in this act more than twice in any twelve-month period, except in the case of abuse of a minor.”¹⁴ This section of the statute has been repealed and there is no longer a restriction on the number of times a victim may use the procedure.¹⁵

▲ Confidentiality

Protection From Abuse

The plaintiff may request that certain information be kept confidential. In order for the plaintiff’s address or telephone number or both to remain confidential, the court must make a finding that confidentiality is necessary for the protection of the victim, victim’s minor children, or minor children residing with the victim. If such a finding is made, this information should not be disclosed to the public; however, it will still be available to authorized court or law enforcement personnel.¹⁶

16 K.S.A. 2018 Supp. 60-3104(3).

Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault, or Human Trafficking

According to the Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault, or Human Trafficking Act, the victim's address and telephone number are not to be disclosed to either the defendant or the public. Only authorized court and law enforcement personnel are permitted access to this information.¹⁷

▲ Emergency Relief

Protection From Abuse

If the court is unavailable, such as on evenings, weekends, and holidays, an emergency protection from abuse order may be an option. In order for an emergency protection order to be issued, a verified petition along with a proposed order must be presented to a district court judge.¹⁸ An emergency order may be granted ex parte and may include the same relief as an ex parte temporary order (see below). An emergency order requires there to be an immediate and present danger of abuse to the plaintiff or minor child or children. The order is only good until 5:00 p.m. on the first day that the court resumes business, before which time the plaintiff must return to the court in order to obtain a temporary ex parte order and hearing date.¹⁹

Keep in mind that the actual process for filing and issuing emergency orders varies among districts, and many courts have no procedures in place allowing for emergency orders to be issued. The victim should contact their local sexual and domestic violence advocacy program to discuss options and other ways to enhance their safety during this critical time.

18 K.S.A. 60-3105(a) (2005).

Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault, or Human Trafficking

The Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault, or Human Trafficking Act does not provide for an emergency order. Again, the victim should contact their local sexual and domestic violence advocacy program to discuss options and other ways to enhance their safety during this critical time.

▲ Temporary Order Issued Ex Parte

Protection From Abuse

If good cause is shown in the petition, the court may issue a temporary order before the other side receives notice.²⁰ Good cause means “immediate and present danger of abuse to the plaintiff or minor children.”²¹ This order is only temporary and a hearing on the petition will still be required. If the hearing is continued, the judge may extend the temporary orders.²² If the judge denies the request for a temporary order, the court should still set an evidentiary hearing on the petition.²³

Temporary orders may only include the following:²⁴

- Restrain the defendant from abusing, molesting, or interfering with the privacy or rights of the plaintiff or of any minor children of the parties.²⁵

- Restrain the defendant from entering or remaining upon the plaintiff’s residence or household.²⁷
- Restrain the defendant from canceling utility services to the residence or household for 60 days following the date of issuing order.²⁸
- Award temporary custody and residence and establish temporary parenting time with regard to minor children.²⁹
 - Note: No temporary order may modify an existing order granting legal custody, residency, visitation, or parenting time unless there is sworn testimony at a hearing to support a showing of good cause.
- Order a law enforcement officer to evict the defendant from the residence or household.³⁰

Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault, or Human Trafficking

If good cause is shown in the petition, the court may issue a temporary order before the other side receives notice.³¹ In order to show good cause, the victim must file a verified petition that supports a “prima facie” case of stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking. This means that the plaintiff must set forth facts that, if they were

▲ Preparation for Final Hearing

Talk to an Advocate⁴¹

- If possible, and if the plaintiff feels comfortable doing so, the plaintiff should speak with a sexual or domestic violence advocacy program advocate, even if they spoke with one before they decided to petition for a protection order.
- An advocate can help the plaintiff understand the court process, prepare themselves for the hearing, prepare for what might happen after the hearing, and develop a safety plan.
- An advocate cannot provide legal advice for a plaintiff. If the plaintiff wants or needs legal advice, they should contact an attorney.

Hiring an Attorney⁴²

- The plaintiff might want to speak with or hire an attorney if they think they need one. This should be done as soon as possible.
- An attorney can help the plaintiff understand the court process, prepare for trial, and prepare for what might happen after trial.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 4: Protection Order Basics

- The plaintiff should seriously consider speaking with or hiring an attorney if the defendant has filed a counter-petition or a new petition against them, or if there is a chance that a mutual order might be issued.
 - There are negative consequences that can arise from having a protection order issued against the victim.
- The plaintiff might also consider speaking with or hiring an attorney if they are married to and/or has children with the defendant and will likely be filing for a divorce or child support/custody.
 - The proceedings intersect in ways that may be confusing for someone who is not an attorney.
 - The plaintiff should also seriously consider speaking with or hiring an attorney if the court is consolidating the protection order with the divorce or custody case.
 - Even though the Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault or Human Trafficking Act does not provide for child custody orders to be issued, a PFSSAHT order could affect the ability of the parties to co-parent, and facts set forth in the PFSSAHT hearing may be used in a custody hearing.
 - Additionally, if there are any issues involving interstate custody, the plaintiff should consider speaking with an attorney.

Request an Interpreter

If the plaintiff does not speak English or is deaf, they should contact the court and request, in writing, if possible, that an interpreter be present at the hearing. This should be done as soon as possible.

- K.S.A. 75-4351 mandates that a qualified interpreter be appointed for the plaintiff, defendant, and any witness in a civil proceeding.

NOTE: Fees for services are not to be assessed to the person needing the interpreter but are to be paid for out of court operations' funds.

▲ Service on the Defendant

If there is service on the defendant, the defendant must show up or else the defendant gives up their opportunity to be heard and a default order may be issued.

If there is no service on the defendant, the case may be continued until there is service on the defendant. The court may continue the temporary order until the next court date.⁴³ If there continues to be no service on the defendant, the court will have to dismiss the case. The petitioner/victim can refile the petition at a later date, if they have new information about a potential location where the defendant can be served.

▲ Final Hearing

At the final hearing, the plaintiff must prove the allegation of abuse, stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking by a preponderance of the evidence (meaning that it was more likely than not that the abuse, stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking occurred). The defendant shall have an opportunity to present evidence on the defendant's behalf.⁴⁴

43 K.S.A. 60-3106(c), K.S.A. 2018 Supp. 60-31a05(c).

44 K.S.A. 60-3106(a), K.S.A. 2018 Supp. 60-31a05(a).

▲ Appearance in Court

The plaintiff must be present at the final hearing. If the plaintiff does not appear, the case may be dismissed. If the plaintiff does not appear, the courts may also order the plaintiff to pay court costs, fees, etc.

If the plaintiff appears but the defendant does not appear, so long as the defendant has been properly served, the plaintiff may be awarded a final protection order. The judge may ask the plaintiff questions to prove the allegations of abuse, stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking by a preponderance of the evidence. If both the plaintiff and the defendant appear, the defendant can decide whether to agree to the order or contest it.

- If the defendant agrees, the plaintiff may be awarded a consent order or have their order for protection granted.
- If the defendant contests, there will be a hearing to determine whether the plaintiff should be awarded the protection order. This hearing could be the same day or scheduled for another day.
 - If the hearing is scheduled for the same day and the defendant has an attorney and the plaintiff does not, the plaintiff should consider asking the judge for a continuance so they can obtain an attorney. If they do not, they may be at a disadvantage.
 - The hearing must generally occur within 21 days of the filing of the petition.⁴⁵
 - Unless a continuance is deemed necessary by the judge.⁴⁶

46 K.S.A. 2018 Supp. 60-31a05(c).

▲ Final Order

After hearing all of the evidence, the judge will determine if the plaintiff has met the burden of proof. If the judge decides that it is more likely than not that the abuse, stalking, sexual assault or human trafficking occurred, the judge should issue a final order of protection.

This order can include the relief requested and any other relief that the court believes is appropriate.

While not required for enforcement, it is recommended that the plaintiff keep a copy of the order with them at all times. This order is valid in Kansas and all other states, tribal lands, and U.S. Territories.

Protection From Abuse

In the PFA, final orders many include more and/or different relief than is included in the temporary order, including the following:⁴⁷

- Restrain the defendant from abusing, molesting or interfering with the privacy or rights of the plaintiff or of any minor children. This may include utilizing an electronic tracking system or acquiring tracking information to determine the plaintiff's location, movement, or travel patterns.
- The order must also include a statement that a violation of the order may constitute an assault under K.S.A. 21-5412(a), battery under K.S.A. 21-5413(a), domestic battery under K.S.A. 21-5414, and a violation of a protective order under K.S.A. 21-5924.⁴⁸

- Grant possession of the residence or household to the plaintiff to the exclusion of the defendant, and further restrain the defendant from entering or remaining upon or in such residence or household.

- Restrain the defendant from canceling utility service to the residence or household for 60 days from the date the order is issued.⁵⁰
- Mandating the defendant to provide suitable, alternate housing for the plaintiff and any minor children of the parties.⁵¹
- Grant temporary custody and residency and establishing temporary parenting time with regard to the minor children.⁵²
- Order a law enforcement officer to evict the defendant from the residence or household.⁵³
- Imposing support payments for the support of the party's minor child, if the defendant is the mother or the father of the child, or for the plaintiff, if the plaintiff is married to the defendant.

- Order the transfer of one or more wireless service numbers as contained in the Order Transferring Wireless Services Number(s) from Defendant to Plaintiff.⁵⁷

- Order or restrain any other acts deemed necessary to promote the safety of the plaintiff or of any other minor children of the parties.⁵⁹
 - This is the “catch-all” provision. This allows the plaintiff and the judge to address additional safety concerns. Here the plaintiff can ask for anything that will help make her or the children safe. Some things the judge could order are: order the defendant not to possess any guns or other weapons, order the defendant to pay moving expenses, order that the plaintiff will have custody and control of any of the animals of the household or on the farm, order the defendant to turn over any important documents, and order that the plaintiff have possession of the household car or other mode of transportation.

Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault, or Human Trafficking⁶⁰

The PFSSAHT Act does not make a distinction between what can be included in the temporary order and the final order. The final order may include the following relief:

- Restrain the defendant from following, harassing, telephoning, contacting, or otherwise communicating with the victim. “Harassing” may include utilizing an electronic tracking system or acquiring tracking information to determine the plaintiff’s location, movement, or travel patterns.
 - The order must also include a statement that a violation of the order may constitute stalking under K.S.A. 21-5427 and a violation of a protective order under K.S.A. 21-5924.⁶¹
- Restrain the defendant from abusing, molesting, or interfering with the privacy rights of the victim.
 - The order must contain a statement that a violation of the order may constitute stalking as provided in K.S.A. 21-5427, assault as provided in K.S.A. 21-5412(a), battery as provided in K.S.A. 21-5413(a), and a violation of a protective order as provided in K.S.A. 21-5924.⁶²
- Restrain the defendant from entering upon or into the victim’s residence or the immediate vicinity thereof.
 - The order must contain a statement that a violation of the order shall constitute criminal trespass as provided in K.S.A. 21-5808(a)(1)(C) and a violation of a protective order as provided in K.S.A. 21-5924.⁶³

- Restrain the defendant from committing or attempting to commit a sexual assault upon the victim.
 - The order must contain a statement that a violation of the order shall constitute violation of a protective order, as defined in K.S.A. 2017 Supp. 21-5924; violation of the order may constitute a sex offense under article 55 of chapter 21 of the Kansas Statutes Annotated, and the accused may be prosecuted, convicted of and punished for such sex offense.
- Restrain the defendant from following, harassing, telephoning, contacting, recruiting, harboring, transporting, or committing or attempting to commit human trafficking upon the human trafficking victim, or otherwise communicating with the human trafficking victim.
 - The order shall contain a statement that, if the order is violated, the violation shall constitute violation of a protective order, as defined in K.S.A. 2017 Supp. 21-5924; violation of the order may also constitute an offense under chapter 21 of the Kansas Statutes Annotated, and the accused may be prosecuted, convicted of and punished for such an offense.
- Order the defendant to pay court costs or attorney fees.
- Order the transfer of one or more wireless service numbers as contained in the Order Transferring Wireless Services Number(s) from Defendant to Plaintiff.⁶⁴
- Any other order deemed necessary by the court to protect victims of stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking.⁶⁵
 - This is the “catch-all” provision. This allows the plaintiff and the judge to address additional safety concerns. Here the plaintiff can ask for anything that will help make the victim safe. This could include removal of firearms or other weapons from the defendant's possession.

▲ Length of Order

The protection order may remain in effect until modified or dismissed by the court and shall be for a fixed period of time not less than one year and not more than two years. See the section below for additional information about extension options for the order. The order lengths for protection orders were amended in the 2023 Legislative session and may not be known or adopted fully in all jurisdictions.⁶⁶

▲ Mutual Order/Order Against the Plaintiff

A “mutual” order is an order issued by a court when both parties (the plaintiff and the defendant) have been found to have abused, attempted to abuse, or threatened to abuse each other. Unlike a regular order, a mutual order restrains the actions of both parties.

In order for a mutual protection from abuse order to be entered against the plaintiff, the following must occur:

- The defendant must properly file a written cross or counter petition seeking a protection order.
- The plaintiff must have reasonable notice of the written cross or counter petition by personal service.
 - It is unclear what “reasonable notice” is, but the day of the final hearing, or at the final hearing, is arguably not “reasonable.”

66 K.S.A. 2023 Supp. 60-3107(e), 60-31a06(b).

Section 4: Protection Order Basics

- The issuing court must make specific findings of abuse against both the plaintiff and the defendant and determine that both parties acted primarily as aggressors and neither party acted primarily in self-defense.⁶⁷

A mutual order can be very harmful to the victim in a number of ways. If the victim violates the order, they may be criminally prosecuted for violation of a protection order. A mutual order can make the order harder to enforce when the defendant violates it because the party violating the order may not be clear. Also, the order must include a finding that both parties abused each other, which can be used against the victim in a custody or divorce case. There are additional concerns for immigrant and non-citizen victims. A victim may be safer without a protection order than with a mutual order. A victim should be strongly advised to speak with an attorney if they are faced with a mutual protection order.

▲ Extension of Order

There are two options for extending an order:

- you can file a motion with the court to extend the order of protection for an additional one to three years; or
- you can file a verified motion with the court for an additional one year and up to the lifetime of the defendant if the defendant has violated the order or has been convicted of certain crimes.

The defendant has the right to be notified if a Motion to Extend is filed, but personal service is only required if you are filing for an extension of one year or up to the lifetime of the defendant (option 2). Both options for extending an order of protection require

67 K.S.A. 60-3107(b).

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 4: Protection Order Basics

the defendant to be given notice and an opportunity to be heard.⁶⁸ Additionally, a motion for extension must set forth particular grounds for seeking the renewed order.⁶⁹

Option 1: Up to Three Year Extension

A protected party may seek an extension of a final order for an additional one to three years. To seek this extension, a plaintiff will need to fill out a “Motion to Extend Order for One to Three Years.”⁷⁰ This motion to extend (i.e., the paperwork) should be filed in the same court where the plaintiff took the original protection order petition.⁷¹ This extension is at the sole discretion of the court. While no violations or new incidents are required, the plaintiff should still provide specific facts that show the need for an extension of the order.⁷² Prior to being amended to include victims of sexual assault, the PFSSAHTA required a plaintiff to show a continued threat of stalking to receive an extension of the order; however that is no longer the case.⁷³

Option 2: One Year up to the Lifetime of the Defendant Extension

An extension lasting from one year up to the lifetime of the defendant is available if the defendant has violated a valid protection order or has been convicted of committing a person felony against the protected party or a member of their household. In order to seek this longer extension, the plaintiff will need to fill out a “Motion to Extend Order for One Year or Up to Life.”⁷⁴ This motion requires the plaintiff to include information about the violation or the conviction, swear to it by signing the motion, and ask the court to order service on the defendant with a copy of the motion personally. Again, this extension requires a hearing on the motion where the plaintiff is allowed to present evidence or testimony regarding the violation or conviction, and the defendant also has the opportunity to present evidence in their defense. The defendant can present witnesses and ask questions of the plaintiff or the plaintiff's witnesses. If the court finds that it is more likely than not the defendant violated a valid protection order or was convicted of a person felony, the court will extend the order for a period of not less than two years up to the lifetime of the defendant.⁷⁵

▲ Consent Agreements

The Protection From Abuse Act allows for consent agreements between the parties so long as it brings about a cessation of abuse of the plaintiff.⁷⁶ Consent agreements are not mutual orders. A mutual order does not bring about the cessation of abuse of the plaintiff. A consent agreement comes about when the defendant consents without a hearing to a protection order being entered and the parties agree on issues of property, custody, and parenting time. Consent agreements that attempt to limit or restrict the plaintiff from contacting the defendant are likely void. Plaintiff's attorneys should not counsel their clients to agree to any order that purports to restrict the plaintiff. The plaintiff should not sign a consent order without speaking with an attorney first.

▲ Dismissal or Modification of the Protection Order

Once a protection order is issued, it remains in effect until it expires unless it is modified by the court.⁷⁷ The parties cannot modify or dismiss the order on their own. This means that the parties should not ignore the order or pretend it does not exist if they decide to reconcile. If the plaintiff no longer wants the order, the plaintiff should file a motion to modify the expiration date of the temporary or final protection order or ask that the order be dismissed.

▲ Enforcement

Service on the Defendant

Generally, an order must be served to the defendant before it can be enforced. Law enforcement may, however, arrest a defendant for a violation if the defendant had prior knowledge of the order despite having not been formally served. Law enforcement should follow departmental policy. The plaintiff can also still call law enforcement if the order has not been served. Keep in mind that in many jurisdictions, police officers, in addition to the sheriff, have the authority to serve the order on the defendant. Therefore, if the defendant has not yet been served, it is wise for the plaintiff to keep an extra copy of the order and proof of service form (available from the district court clerk) with them to give to any law enforcement officers who might be able to serve the defendant. Additionally, even though the abuser or stalker cannot be charged with violation of a protection order prior to service, there may still be other charges that law enforcement can use to arrest the defendant and protect the victim.

Full Faith and Credit

A valid protection order is enforceable where it is issued and in all other United States jurisdictions, including all 50 states, Washington D.C., the U.S. Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, American Samoa, and Tribal Lands.⁷⁸

Section 4: Protection Order Basics

A civilian protection order is also valid on all United States military bases. There are different procedures for the military enforcement of civilian protection orders; therefore, it is a good idea for the victim to work with an advocate or attorney who can contact military base personnel to see how they will handle the protection order and any violations.

In order to be enforceable, the defendant in the protection order hearing must have had notice and an opportunity to be heard.⁷⁹ Not all states have the same type of protection orders or the same criteria to qualify for one. The laws of the state where the order originally was issued control the terms of the order. The court that issued the order determines who is protected, the terms and conditions of the order, and how long the order is in effect. The violation is a crime in the state where the violation occurred. That state's law determines how the order is enforced, the arresting authority of law enforcement officers, and the penalties and sanctions for a violation of the protection order.

If a victim comes to Kansas from another state bringing their protection order with them, they do not have to file or register the protection order in Kansas for it to be valid.⁸⁰ They can file or register the order if they wish; however, filing or registering the order may allow the abuser to track them down. This possibility should be carefully considered before filing or registering any order. If they feel safe doing so, they can register the order with the sheriff in the county where it will be enforced to make the sheriff's office aware of the fact that they have a protection order and the circumstances surrounding the order.⁸¹ The sheriff's department should not notify the defendant. The victim may also want to find out if their order was entered into National Crime Information Center (NCIC), which should have been done in the issuing state. While NCIC should not be used as the sole means to determine the validity of a protection order, its entry into the system will help officers in an enforcing state make the determination about its validity. A law enforcement officer in Kansas only needs to determine there is probable cause to believe that a protection order issued in another state exists, the defendant has been served, and that the order has been violated.⁸² As long as a protection order that identifies both the protected individual and the defendant is presented, and on its face is currently in effect, there is probable cause to believe that the protection order from the other state exists.⁸³ Even if an out-of-state protection order is not presented, a law enforcement officer may consider other information to determine whether there is probable cause to believe that a protection order exists.⁸⁴

If a victim is leaving Kansas and taking their protection order with them to another state, an advocate or an attorney should help them find out what the requirements are for enforcement of their protection order in the state where they are going. The state's sexual or domestic violence coalition or a local sexual and domestic violence advocacy program should have this information. They should also check if their order has been entered into NCIC in Kansas. This will help law enforcement officers in the new state recognize the order's validity more easily. Some important information for the victim to take with them might include the contact information for the clerk's office where the order was issued, the contact information for the sheriff's office where the order was originally entered, the court case number, the name of the judge who signed the order, and the local sexual and domestic violence advocacy program or state coalition information for the new state.

Once the victim arrives in the new state they may want to file or register their order; however, filing or registering the order in the new state may allow the abuser to track them down. This should be carefully considered before filing or registering any order.

The victim may also want to meet with local law enforcement face to face, especially if they are moving to a small town or there is a special domestic violence unit. This way, if the defendant finds them, there may be less confusion as to the validity of the protection order and the serious nature of the violation of the order.

Entry into National Crime Information Center (NCIC)

When a PFA order is issued, law enforcement enters the order into a national database (NCIC) accessible to most law enforcement agencies. This does not mean that a protection order is permanently in the NCIC or on an individual's "record." This includes all temporary, amended, and final PFA orders.⁸⁵ There is no statute requiring PFSSAHT orders be entered into the NCIC, and law enforcement agencies may have varying policies. Therefore, law enforcement should only be using the NCIC database to assist them in determining the validity of a protection order; the database should not be relied upon as the only means of making this determination. Officers should look at the face of the order for validity.

Criminal Violation of a Protective Order

A criminal charge of violating a protective order may be brought against someone who is subject to a protection from abuse, stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking order and knowingly or intentionally violates that order.⁸⁶ Other types of protection orders are also included in the criminal statute. Violating an order is a class A misdemeanor.⁸⁷ Violating an extended order for two years and up to the lifetime of the defendant is a severity level 6, person felony.⁸⁸

A violation of a protection order may also constitute felony stalking under K.S.A. 21-5427.⁸⁹ For a violation to constitute felony stalking, the defendant must recklessly engage in one act listed under the statute that violates a provision of the protection order that would cause the protected person to fear for his or her safety, or the safety of a member of his or her immediate family and is actually placed in fear.⁹⁰ Included in that list is any act of communication.⁹¹ Felony stalking in violation of a protection order is a Severity level 9, person felony on the first conviction and severity level 5, person felony upon a second or subsequent conviction.⁹²

Contempt

Both the PFAA and the PFSSAHTA allow a court, after a hearing and finding that there has been a violation of its order,⁹³ to hold the defendant in contempt and punish him as the court directs.⁹⁴ The plaintiff should consult an attorney if seeking a finding of contempt.

Kansas Firearms Laws

In July of 2018, the State of Kansas made it a crime for a person subject to certain protection orders to possess a firearm. For a person to be guilty of criminal use of weapons they must knowingly:

 - Restrains such person from harassing, stalking or threatening an intimate partner of such person or a child of such person or such intimate partner, or engaging in other conduct that would place an intimate partner in reasonable fear of bodily injury to the partner or the child; and
 - Includes a finding that such person represents a credible threat to the physical safety of such intimate partner or child; or

 - The plaintiff must be an intimate partner of the defendant. The statute defines an intimate partner as a spouse or former spouse, a person who is the parent of the child of the abuser, or a person who cohabitates or who has cohabitated with the defendant.⁹⁷ This definition does not include orders against a person who was in a dating relationship but did not live with the plaintiff or share a child with the plaintiff. Therefore, not all orders issued under the Protection From Abuse or Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault or Human Trafficking Acts would qualify under this statute.

If an order meets these requirements and the court-restrained abuser possesses a firearm or ammunition, he can be subject to criminal prosecution. There does not need to be a statement in the protection order requiring the defendant to turn over his firearms for this law to be in effect, although it is always a good idea to include such language if the plaintiff is aware that the defendant possesses firearms or ammunition. A court cannot circumvent this law by including language in the protection order allowing the defendant to possess firearms.

Unlike the federal law, there are no exceptions in Kansas state law for law enforcement or members of the military.

By the end of summer 2024, the Supreme Court of the United States will make a ruling on the United States v. Rahimi case, which prohibits the possession of firearms by persons subject to domestic violence restraining orders, and whether that violates the Second Amendment of the United States Constitution. Depending on the outcome, the information in the following section could change.

Federal Firearms Laws

Federal laws also prohibit certain court-restrained abusers from possessing firearms and ammunition.⁹⁸ For a person to be prohibited from possessing a firearm they must meet the following conditions:

98 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(8) (2005).

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 4: Protection Order Basics

- The protection order must have been issued after a hearing of which the defendant had actual notice and opportunity to participate. Since most emergency and temporary ex parte orders are issued before notice is provided to the defendant, most do not qualify under this federal law.
- The order must restrain the defendant from harassing, stalking, or threatening an intimate partner of the abuser or child of the abuser or intimate partner, or engaging in other conduct that would place an intimate partner in reasonable fear of bodily injury to the partner or child.
- The order must include a finding that the defendant represents a credible threat to the physical safety of the intimate partner or child, or the order must explicitly prohibit the use, attempted use or threatened use of physical force against the intimate partner or child that would reasonably be expected to cause bodily injury.
- The plaintiff must be an intimate partner of the defendant. The statute defines an intimate partner as a spouse or former spouse, a person who is the parent of the child of the abuser, or a person who cohabitates or who has cohabitated with the defendant.⁹⁹ This definition does not include orders against a person who was in a dating relationship but did not live with the plaintiff or share a child with the plaintiff. Therefore, not all orders issued under the Protection From Abuse or Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault or Human Trafficking Acts would qualify under the federal statute.

There is a limited exemption for law enforcement officers, armed forces personnel, and other local, state, and federal employees who are required to use weapons as part of their official duties.¹⁰⁰ The law allows them to use and possess their firearms while performing their duties at work. Weapons possessed in a personal capacity by the officials, however, are prohibited for the duration of the final protection order.

Often the abuser will try to give their weapons or ammunition to friends or family members to hold during the time the protection order is in effect. The federal court issuing the order should make sure that the people holding the firearms or ammunition are aware that they too are subject to federal prosecution if they return a firearm or ammunition to a person while knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that that person is subject to a federally qualifying protection order.¹⁰¹

In July of 2016 the Supreme Court issued their judgment holding that a reckless domestic assault qualifies as a “misdemeanor crime of domestic violence” that prohibits convicted felons from possessing firearms according to 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(9). (Kansas also added this language to K.S.A. 2017 Supp. 21- 6301(a)(18)).¹⁰²

Voisine pleaded guilty to assaulting his girlfriend, which was a misdemeanor defined in Maine as, “intentionally, knowingly or recklessly causing bodily injury” to another. During an unrelated investigation, law enforcement discovered a rifle in his possession. Upon learning of his conviction for assault, the government charged Voisine with violating §922(g)(9), which makes it a crime for a person convicted of misdemeanor domestic violence to possess a firearm. Armstrong pleaded guilty to assaulting his wife, in violation of the same Maine law. Similar to Voisine, during a later investigation of Armstrong, law enforcement discovered six guns and a large amount of ammunition. Armstrong was subsequently charged under §922(g)(9). Voisine and Armstrong argue that they were not subject to §922(g)(9), the federal firearm possession prohibition, because their prior convictions could have been based on a reckless state of mind as opposed to knowing or intentional, thereby not qualifying as misdemeanor crimes of domestic violence.

- The court held that reckless domestic assault qualifies as a “misdemeanor crime of domestic violence” under §922(g)(9). This extends the federal prohibition on firearms possession by convicted felons to persons convicted of misdemeanor domestic violence.¹⁰³

Pauler appealed his conviction for violating 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(9), arguing that a misdemeanor violation of a municipal ordinance does not qualify as a “misdemeanor under Federal, State, or Tribal law.”

Pauler was convicted in 2009 of violating a municipal domestic battery ordinance for punching his girlfriend. In 2014, he was found to be in possession of a firearm and was convicted of violating 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(9), which states, “it shall be unlawful for any person ... who has been convicted in any court of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence, to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce, or possess in or affecting commerce, any firearms or ammunition; or to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce.”

The district court denied Pauler’s motion to dismiss the indictment for failure to state an offense. While this denial would typically be reviewed for an abuse of discretion, Pauler’s argument presents a question of law and is reviewed de novo. On appeal, the government contends that the term “State” in § 921(a)(33)’s definition section should be interpreted to mean “State and local.” If this were the case, a municipal misdemeanor conviction would constitute a misdemeanor under state law. Throughout § 921 and 922, “State and local” and “State or local” are used when referring to both states and municipalities.

Further, the government argued that “State” should be interpreted to mean “State and local” in this one subsection of the statute, “when it means to include local government or laws within the scope of a particular subsection- because Congress surely intended for municipal domestic violence offenders to be covered under the scope of § 922(g)(9), since the dangers of firearms in the hands of domestic violence offenders are the same regardless of the jurisdictional source of an individual's prior domestic violence conviction. The court found that it would be inappropriate to depart from well-established rules of statutory interpretation and held that Pauler's prior violation of a municipal ordinance was not a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" and therefore he was not prohibited from possessing a firearm under § 922(g)(9).

! It is important to keep in mind that Kansas law does not provide for the immediate removal of firearms from a person against whom a restraining order has been issued. The plaintiff should be aware of this when the protection order is issued. A plaintiff may ask for the weapons to be confiscated by local law enforcement through the "catch-all" provision in the protection order.

Additionally, Kansas law prohibits anyone who is subject to a restraining order which would qualify under the federal firearms prohibition from obtaining a license to carry concealed weapons.¹⁰⁴ If the defendant already has a concealed carry license when the protection order is issued, the sheriff notifies the director of the concealed carry unit of the attorney general's office.¹⁰⁵ If the director verifies that a qualified restraining order has been issued against a person who holds a concealed carry license, the director issues a written order revoking the license of the person named as the subject of the restraining order and notice is sent to the restrained person by United States mail.¹⁰⁶ As of July 1, 2015, a concealed carry license is not required for individuals to carry concealed firearms in Kansas.¹⁰⁷ Individuals may still wish to seek a license in order to carry in states that allow concealed carry permit reciprocity.

Safety Planning Involving Firearms

It is important for the victim to remember that whether known weapons have been removed or licenses have been revoked, there is no guarantee that their abuser or stalker will not still possess a firearm and try to harm them. Safety planning should always account for the fact the defendant may have a firearm.

Section 5: Children & Protection Orders

Protection orders are not limited to the protection of adults. Minor victims may also receive protection orders, however, a parent or adult residing with the minor, a court-appointed guardian, or a court-appointed custodian must file the petition on the minor's behalf.¹ If filing for a PFSSAHT order on behalf of a minor, the petition must be filed in the county where the stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking occurred.²

(NOTE: A Protection from Human Trafficking Order may also be sought on behalf of a minor by a county or district attorney, or the Attorney General.)³

When the defendant in a PFA or PFSSAHT proceeding is also a minor, the petition must be served on an adult as well as the minor defendant.⁴ The adult must be the minor's mother, father, guardian, any person who is providing for the child's care, or a person with whom the minor is residing.⁵ Advocates should be aware that a "Minor Defendant Addendum to Final Protection Order"⁶ form must be completed and attached to any petition, motion or temporary protection order involving a minor defendant. The form asks for the age of the defendant, any available addresses for the defendant as well as names and any available addresses of the defendant's parents or legal guardians.

▲ Child Custody, Support and Parenting Time

Sharing custody of minor children with an abuser can further complicate an already complicated situation for victims of domestic violence. Two common ways perpetrators continue to exert control over victims after separation are through their children and their finances. Under the Protection From Abuse Act (PFAA), victims may be able to receive custody, visitation, and child support determinations within their protection from abuse (PFA) order.⁷ Custody established in a PFA case, however, will only last the length of the PFA, or if the order is extended, up to an additional twelve months. These orders should not be considered a permanent alternative to divorce or paternity proceedings. Obtaining specific orders regarding children and child support within a PFA, however, can make the order a much more useful and successful strategy for victims seeking safety and independence.

▲ Paternity

A PFA order may establish temporary custody and parenting time for victims and their children, but only if paternity has been established.⁸ Victims must consider a few possible legal consequences which may arise from the establishment of paternity. Once established, the court retains jurisdiction over the child if the child, the mother, or the father remains in that state.⁹ A victim fleeing violence may want to avoid establishing the parental rights of an abusive father. When a victim seeks a PFA and paternity has not been established, they may be starting the legal process that leads to the establishment of parentage. Victims should consider the risks and benefits to having the presumption of paternity become part of the court record in a PFA case thus establishing evidence for a future parentage action that could result in continued contact with the abuser until the child turns eighteen.

▲ Child Custody and the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act (UCCJEA)

The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act (UCCJEA) is used to determine which state’s courts have the legal ability to decide issues of custody.¹⁰ The court’s power to decide a case is called jurisdiction.¹¹ In order to seek custody under the PFAA, a petition must include information establishing that the court has jurisdiction over the custody of the child.¹² A Kansas court will have jurisdiction to determine child custody if the child’s “home state” is Kansas.¹³ A child’s “home state” is the state in which a child lived for six consecutive months immediately before the custody proceedings.¹⁴ If the child does not have a “home state,” then the court will require that the child and at least one parent have significant connections with the state and that substantial evidence is available within the state concerning the child’s care, protection, and personal relationships.¹⁵ Once a Kansas court has jurisdiction over child custody, that court keeps it until another court accepts jurisdiction.

When requesting custody within a PFA order, the petition must include information establishing the court’s jurisdiction pursuant to the UCCJEA.¹⁶ The Petition for Protection From Abuse Order form¹⁷ addresses child custody and references the UCCJEA affidavit form.¹⁸ This form¹⁹ must be attached if the petitioner wishes the PFA to determine custody and parenting rights.²⁰ The affidavit form asks for the child or children's names, addresses and if the petitioner has been involved in any cases concerning custody or visitation.²¹ The form also asks if the petitioner has knowledge of any other proceeding past or present that could affect custody of the children.²² Examples of such proceedings are: divorce, paternity, and child in need of care cases. Court locations, case type and case numbers are requested on the affidavit.²³ If the victim cannot acquire the exact information, it may be acceptable to give approximations as long as the city and state are accurate.

▲ Moving with Children

Once a court determines it has jurisdiction over children, it retains that jurisdiction. Thus, if a victim obtains a PFA order which also makes orders regarding children, the victim would not be able to relocate with those children without the court's permission.

Kansas law requires notice to be given to the other parent when the child is moved to a new home or if the child leaves the state for more than 90 days.²⁴ Notice is required not less than thirty days before the move by registered mail to the last known address of the other parent.²⁵ Failure to give notice may be considered a material change of circumstance justifying a change in custody, residency or parenting time. If the move is contested in court by the other parent, the court will consider the effect the move will have on the child, the parents, and any increase in financial burden on a parent wishing to continue visitation with the child.²⁶

! ● Therefore, if a victim is considering relocating to another area of the state or to another state, then obtaining PFA order prior to moving may make it more difficult to relocate. For victims sharing parenting time with perpetrators, notification of a residential change can pose a big safety concern.

Another consideration for victims when it comes to moving is “interference with parental custody.”²⁷ It is a felony crime to take a child from Kansas to another state with the intent to conceal that child from a parent.²⁸ This is true even if there is no court order regarding parentage or custody. Before planning a move, a victim should consult with an attorney in Kansas, as well as an attorney in the state or county to where the victim wants to relocate.

▲ Parenting Plan or Parenting Time

A parenting plan is an agreement or order setting out the details of the legal custody, residency, and parenting time.²⁹ Parenting plans may include residential, holiday, and birthday schedules and allocation of responsibilities as to the health, education, and welfare of the child.³⁰ Creating a parenting plan simply entails writing down these proposed schedules and attaching them to the PFA petition. Parenting time is also known as visitation. Parenting time is a schedule of time that a child is with each parent. When a victim seeks custody, residency and parenting orders within a PFA a proposed parenting plan should be as detailed as possible. The victim should consider designating specific times and places for exchange of the children in order to minimize the perpetrator's ability to use the children as a way to further the abuse.

▲ Denying Visitation

Kansas law specifically acknowledges that repeated unreasonable denial or interference with another parent's time may be grounds to modify the order.³¹ Unfortunately for victims, there is no clear standard set by the court to determine what constitutes an unreasonable denial or interference. Just because the victim feels that it is reasonable to not want their children to spend time with the abusive parent, there is no guarantee that the court will agree with them. If an unreasonable interference or denial of visitation is found, the following remedies may be utilized:

A specific schedule for parenting time or visitation may be created;

The parent whose time was interfered with may receive extra time to compensate time lost;

Money or other assets may be put up as bond to ensure compliance with order;

Costs associated with the enforcement may be assessed on the other parent;

Counseling or parenting education may be ordered;

Supervised visitation may be ordered;

Or whatever else the court feels is appropriate.³²

In order to address the concerns of the victim, advocates should plan for the safety of the child and the victim during visitation and exchanges. When a protective parent has reason to believe their child is in danger, seeking supervised visitation or exchanges at a designated visitation and exchange center, within the PFA, may be an option.³³

▲ Visitation Exchange Centers When Developing Parenting Plans

Some areas of the state have visitation centers available to provide supervised child exchanges or supervised child visitation for children and families at risk of domestic and sexual violence.³⁴ Advocates should be aware of whether such services exist and how costs for these services are usually handled. Either party may ask the court to require visitations or exchanges to take place at one of these centers.³⁵ When a center is not available, other arrangements will need to be made if visits require supervision. When selecting someone to supervise exchanges or visitation it is helpful if both sides can agree to the person doing the supervision. Problems can arise when the supervisor is overly biased toward one party or the other. Further, undedicated supervisors may not take the supervision seriously and not fulfill their duties.

▲ Modification of the Custody and Parenting Order in a PFA

If the custody and parenting time order entered by the court in a PFA is not working for a victim and their children, a victim can seek a modification of that order. The PFAA allows the court to amend or modify its order at any time upon motion filed by either party.³⁶ An approved “Motion to Modify Protection From Abuse Order” form can generally be found in the packet of papers the victim received from the court clerk. If not, all PFA forms can be accessed at www.kscourts.org. The victim would need to describe on the form the change being suggested and why. The motion should then be filed with the court and a copy certified mailed to the defendant or the defendant’s attorney. The defendant would be given an opportunity to respond to the motion, and the court would decide to make any changes to the order.

▲ Child Support

The PFA process also allows for an award of child support for the length of the final order. If the order is extended, child support can be included for up to an additional twelve months.³⁷ Child support provides for both the direct and indirect needs of a child including food, clothing, school, medical, entertainment, housing, utilities, transportation and other expenses related to the care and well-being of the child.³⁸ The minimum support obligation is determined by the Child Support Schedule adopted by the Kansas Supreme Court as recommended by the Child Support Guidelines Advisory Committee.³⁹ The Committee looks at national data on the expenditures of the average family depending on the parents’ combined income, the number and the age of the children.⁴⁰ The parent seeking support must complete and submit to the court a child support worksheet⁴¹ and a domestic relations affidavit⁴² with an application for support or a motion to modify support.⁴³ These forms can be found at www.kscourts.org.

▲ Working with Attorneys

When a victim is represented by an attorney, an advocate can be a valuable resource for both the victim and the attorney. Advocates can help a victim to understand and participate in the legal process, which also helps the attorney make efficient use of their time on the victim’s case. There is, however, no privileged communication recognized between advocates and their clients as there is between attorneys and their clients.⁴⁴ There will be times where it is not in the best interest of the victim for the advocate to be included in their conversations. The level of involvement an advocate may have with the victim and her attorney must ultimately be the informed choice of the victim. The victim should sign an informed time-limited written release before an advocate shares information with a third party, including the victim’s attorney. A victim must also be clearly advised of the possible consequences of any release of information and that they may revoke this permission at any time, for any reason.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 6: Advocates & Protection Orders

Protection orders may be a powerful safety tool for victims of domestic and sexual violence, stalking, and human trafficking. Sometimes, however, protection orders can make a victim less safe. Community members, family, or even law enforcement may encourage victims to file for a protection order, and this may be how the victim comes to seek a sexual or domestic violence advocacy program's services. Understanding both the process of filing for and receiving a protection order, as well as the local jurisdiction's practices for enforcement of protection orders, allows advocates to aide victims in making informed decisions about how to best plan for their safety and determine if that plan includes seeking a protection order.

The protection order process was created with the intent to provide victims of domestic and sexual violence, stalking, and human trafficking legal protections from further abuse or stalking.¹ Advocates also help victims by working with law enforcement, attorneys, and prosecutors towards making sure the system is effectively promoting the safety of victims. "Advocates fulfill the dual role of helping the [victim] navigate the complexities of the protection order system and of identifying the need for and working to make systemic changes that will improve the system's response to battered women and their children when they seek protection."² In order to do this, it is important for advocates to understand how the process works.

This section provides information geared specifically toward domestic and sexual violence and stalking program advocates working with victims to navigate the protection order system.

▲ Unauthorized Practice of Law

Advocates are not attorneys, nor should they be asked to act like one. It is illegal for non-lawyers to provide legal advice. Advocates can, however, provide victims with information on the legal system to better help victims understand the laws and how the protection order process is supposed to work. The protection order process is designed to be accessible to victims, many of whom may not be able to afford legal representation. Many of the victims advocates work with will represent themselves in a court system that is unfamiliar. Advocates provide immense support and are a valuable resource to the victims they assist.

The line between court advocacy and legal advice can be blurry. Remember as an advocate that providing information is helpful, but do not cross the line by applying the facts of a victim's situation to the law or advise the victim on legal actions. You can do this by avoiding definitive language such as "The judge will do ..." or "The court will do ..." or "You have enough evidence to get an order." By using language like this, it can seem like giving legal advice. Instead, advocates can explain what patterns they have seen by helping past survivors. This may look like, "I have seen this judge rule in many ways." Or "I've seen the court do this but I'm not sure how they will work on your case."

▲ Working with Attorneys

When a victim is represented by an attorney, an advocate can be a valuable resource for both the victim and the attorney. Advocates can help a victim to understand and participate in the legal process, which also helps the attorney make efficient use of their time on the victim's case. There is, however, no privileged communication recognized between advocates and their clients as there is between attorneys and their clients.³ There will be times where it is not in the best interest of the victim for the advocate to be included in their conversations. The level of involvement an advocate may have with the victim and their attorney must ultimately be the informed choice of the victim. The victim should sign an informed time-limited written release before an advocate shares information with a third party, including the victim's attorney. A victim must also be clearly advised of the possible consequences of any release of information and that they may revoke this permission at any time, for any reason.

▲ Safety Planning

As discussed in the Basics section of this manual, protection orders are not right for everyone. Advocates should make sure that they first discuss the three important safety planning questions:

- 1 Are they eligible?
- 2 Do they think it will make them safer?
- 3 How might a protection order negatively affect them?

If, through discussing these questions, the victim determines they do not want to seek a protection order, an advocate can offer other advocacy services to the victim including safety planning.

▲ Preparing for the Protection Order Hearing

Gathering Evidence

The plaintiff/victim should gather all evidence from before and after they filed that can help prove the need for a protection order. Advocates can discuss with the victim the types of evidence they may look for, but advocates should not collect evidence for the victim. If, for instance, an advocate takes a picture of a text message, that advocate

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 6: Advocates & Protection Orders

may be required to testify in order for the judge to allow the picture to be admitted into evidence.⁴

Protection From Abuse

This evidence could help prove that “abuse” as defined in the statute occurred,⁵ including, but not limited to:

- Dated photographs of bruises, marks, and injuries;
- Medical records that describe injuries;
- Household objects torn or broken by the abuser;
- Police reports;
- Pictures of the household in disarray after an episode of domestic violence;
- Pictures of weapons used by the abuser (plaintiff should NOT bring the weapon to court);
- Bills of medical expenses and/or property damage;
- Letters, emails, voicemails, or text messages containing threats;
- Letters, emails, voicemails, or text messages describing past abuse (these often come as an apology and/or a request for forgiveness by the abuser); or
- Any other evidence that will help the judge to determine the extent of the abuse or threats of abuse and the support needed by the plaintiff.

4 Meyer, supra note 2, at 19.

5 K.S.A. 60-3102(a).

Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault and Human Trafficking

This evidence could help prove that the plaintiff is being stalked by the defendant, including, but not limited to:

- Letters, emails, voicemails, or text messages showing intentional harassment by the defendant;
- Anything that will help the victim show two or more acts of stalking such as a calendar or log; or
- Anything that might explain or indicate the emotions that the victim felt while being stalked (such as fear).

Possible evidence to prove that the plaintiff has been sexually assaulted or subjected to human trafficking, including, but no limited to:

- Letters, emails, voicemails, or text messages relating to the event;
- Police reports or other professional reports;
- SANE exam materials;
- Anything that might explain the lack of consent such as evidence of alcohol/drug consumption;
- Anything else that will help the victim show that the sexual assault or human trafficking incident occurred.

Witnesses

Witnesses should be prepared to answer questions from both the victim and the defense. These questions may be asked by the victim or victim's attorney or the defendant or defendant's attorney.

- Due to certain legal rules of evidence the witness may not be able to give testimony about things which were not seen or heard by the witness firsthand.⁶
- Protection From Abuse: The victim should try to bring witnesses with them who can describe abuse or injuries that they witnessed firsthand, who saw the reaction of the victim after the abuse, who heard the defendant admit to/describe the abuse, or in any other way can corroborate the victim's description of the abuse.
- Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault or Human Trafficking: The victim should try to bring witnesses to court with them who can corroborate the victim's description of the stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking, their reaction to the stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking, or help to explain how the defendant has placed the victim in fear for their safety (only necessary when seeking a Protection From Stalking Order).

Preparing Testimony

- Testifying in court can be intimidating for victims and cause anxiety due to testifying in front of the defendant. When the victim is pro se, or without an attorney, an advocate may suggest the victim write down the description of the abuse, stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking incident(s) and why they are seeking a protection order and practice saying these before the hearing. This can help the victim to tell their story more clearly to the court.
 - For a PFA, every effort should be made to include the dates and severity of the abuse; specifically, the most recent and the worst incidents.
 - This list should include the same incidents described in the petition.
 - The victim should be sure to mention whether the defendant has a gun or other weapons.

6 K.S.A. 60-460.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 6: Advocates & Protection Orders

- The victim should make a list of the orders they want and practice asking for them.
- The victim should think about what questions the defendant or the defendant's attorney might ask and be prepared to answer those questions.
- It is very important that the victim tries not to lose their temper in the courtroom and always tell the truth.

▲ The Hearing

Protection order hearings may look different from one county to another, but below is a basic outline of what a hearing might look like.

First, the plaintiff will have the opportunity to testify.

- If the plaintiff is represented by an attorney, the attorney will ask the plaintiff questions. If the plaintiff is not represented, they will testify on their own.
- The plaintiff should review the petition before the hearing.
- The plaintiff should be specific in the testimony about the abuse, stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking incident(s). Additionally, the testimony should include the incidents described in the petition.
- The plaintiff should clearly explain why a protection order is needed.
- The plaintiff should always tell the truth, speak slowly, and stay calm. Having an advocate in the courtroom during the hearing can help victims feel more comfortable and less intimidated by the defendant when testifying.
- The plaintiff should speak only to the judge or the plaintiff's attorney while testifying, not to the defendant.

The Plaintiff is the person who files the petition.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 6: Advocates & Protection Orders

- If the plaintiff does not understand a question, they should say that they don't understand instead of trying to answer the question.
- If the judge is speaking, the plaintiff should be careful not to interrupt the judge.

After the plaintiff testifies, the defendant may cross-examine the plaintiff.

- If the defendant has an attorney, the attorney will ask the plaintiff questions.
- The plaintiff should be prepared for ANY questions the defendant may ask, even if they involve issues or incidents that are difficult to discuss.
- The plaintiff should remain calm, even when being asked upsetting questions.
- The plaintiff or their attorney may object to any questions that are not relevant to the case.
- If the defendant or the defendant's attorney asks a question that the plaintiff doesn't understand, the plaintiff should say that they don't understand the question.

The plaintiff may call any witnesses to testify.

- The plaintiff can ask the witness questions related to the abuse, stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking.
- The defendant will also be given an opportunity to cross-examine the witness.

The defendant may testify.

- The plaintiff should remain calm. They may hear statements that are inflammatory or untrue.

After the defendant testifies, the plaintiff may cross-examine the defendant.

- If the plaintiff is represented by an attorney, then the attorney will ask the defendant questions.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 6: Advocates & Protection Orders

- The plaintiff may ask the defendant questions about the defendant's testimony. The plaintiff has the opportunity to confront the defendant with any lies or inconsistencies in the defendant's testimony.

The defendant may call any witnesses to testify.

- The plaintiff will also be given an opportunity to cross-examine the witness.

▲ After the Hearing

Once a victim receives an order, an advocate should discuss with them what they will need to do in case the order is violated. This includes explaining to the victim that they will want to always keep a copy of the order on them. It is not required that the victim carry a copy of the order on her person, but it can be very helpful for law enforcement to quickly enforce the order. They may also choose to provide copies to their workplace. If there are minor children involved, they may provide a copy to the children's schools or daycares. An advocate can also talk with the victim about a safety plan if the defendant violates the order. To seek enforcement of the order, the victim will need to report the violation to law enforcement where the incident occurred. If the victim wishes to discontinue the order or if a provision of the order is not working, such as child visitations or exchanges, the victim will need to file a motion with the court asking the judge to change the order. Finally, the advocate can provide information to the victim about extending the order before it expires if the victim chooses to seek an extension.

If the victim does not qualify for an order or is not granted one for other reasons, an advocate can offer additional advocacy services to them including safety planning.

The opinions, findings, conclusions, or recommendations expressed in this publication, program, or exhibition are those of the author(s) and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Office of the Kansas Governor.

Even though the protection order process was designed to be accessible to pro se litigants, many victims of domestic and sexual violence, stalking, and human trafficking can benefit greatly from the assistance of an attorney. This is especially true if the defendant has an attorney, if complex custody or jurisdictional issues exist, if the defendant has filed for their own protection order, or if there is likely to be a divorce filed. It can be very detrimental for a client to seek a protection order alone.

▲ Legal Safety Planning

As mentioned in the Protection Order Basics section of this manual, safety is always a critical issue for victims of domestic and sexual violence, stalking, and human trafficking, however entering the justice system presents additional and unique safety concerns for victims. Often when a survivor seeks legal assistance, this action can be viewed by the abuser as an attempt towards independence. The mere act of a survivor seeking help may increase the risk for further abuse. Attorneys should discuss safety considerations around the legal process.

Safety Considerations at Court Appearances

- Can the victim sit apart from the abuser and their family or friends who are there?
- Is there a friend or relative who will wait with the victim until their case is heard?
- Should the court security personnel be alerted to potential problems?
- Will the judge keep the abuser in the courthouse for a period of time when the hearing is over so the victim can leave safely?
- Can the victim get a copy of the order before leaving?

Safety Considerations by Attorney Offices

- At every contact with the victim, ask what the best time to call would be. It may be necessary for the victim to call back to the office when they are safe.

Section 7: Civil Attorneys & Protection Orders

- Ask if the phone number they provide is safe. Whose number is it? Never leave voice mail or say who is calling unless you know it is safe.
- Ask if the address provided is a safe address. How long will it be a safe address? Do not mail something if you are not sure the address is still current and safe.
- Is there a code word you can use so you will know whether the abuser is present or that it isn't a good time for them to talk?
- Does the attorney's office block office and cell phone numbers?
- Does the attorney's office have a safety plan?

Safety Considerations for Parenting Time

Specific, enforceable, well-planned and detailed parenting plans work best for both victim and child safety. Consider the child/children's school or daycare schedule, both parents' work schedules, and the realities of each parent's living situation. The children need to get to school on time and hopefully keep doing special activities. Be realistic and ask for what can be reasonably managed.

- Is there an existing parenting plan or informal agreement in place?
- Does the plan include specifics as to:
 - dates and times the children will be with each parent?
 - who will drive the children to the visitation?
 - the place where the children will be picked up by each parent?
 - restrictions on the visitation because of safety concerns? (e.g. Is the victim concerned about drug/alcohol use by the other parent? Can the plan include certain restrictions?)
 - how and when the parents will talk/communicate with each other about the children and the parenting plan?

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 7: Civil Attorneys & Protection Orders

- whether the non-custodial parent can have contact with the children outside of the scheduled visitation?
- special needs of the children? (e.g. Do the children participate in sports? Do they have special food needs?)
- Is third party help needed to:
 - relay messages about the children and/or help set up the visitation schedule?
 - transport the children?
 - supervise visits for safety?
- Is supervised visitation necessary? Who will do this and where should it be done? Have they agreed on time limits? Are specifics needed as to:
 - whether a child exchange and visitation center (CEVC) is available?
 - what level of supervision is provided by CEVC staff?
 - what role, if any, will the CEVC play in the custody/visitation court case?
 - how the CEVC collects, records, and handles information about families and what information might be shared with the court?
 - whether special circumstances should be included if the parties agree for a friend or family member to provide the supervised visitation (i.e. other family that should not be there, restrictions on places they can visit)?

Attorneys can make referrals to local advocacy organizations for additional and more in-depth assistance in the area of safety planning. Making such a referral not only enhances a client’s ability to stay safe but potentially can free up time and resources for the attorney.

▲ Attorneys and Advocates Working Together

Advocates are able to provide immense, holistic support to clients that an attorney may not have the time to provide. Advocates are also often better able to do intense and ongoing safety planning with clients. Communication between the advocate and client, the attorney and client, and the attorney and advocate can help clients understand their options, navigate the legal system, and participate knowledgeably in the case with better outcomes. All communication, however, has to be considered together with rules concerning safety, confidentiality and privilege. If a client isn't already in contact with a local domestic or sexual violence advocacy program, an attorney can provide a referral.

Many attorneys do not do extensive protection order cases or may find themselves in an unfamiliar court. Talking to an advocate can provide valuable information about the protection order court in a particular or unfamiliar jurisdiction.

Confidentiality and Privacy

Confidentiality and privacy play an important role for survivors of sexual and domestic violence and stalking not only in terms of safety but also in their ability and willingness to access the justice system. While professionals engaged in helping a survivor must abide by their own standards and requirements regarding confidentiality, many times the requirements around information sharing vary among professionals. Thus, it is important to understand the confidentiality and privilege obligations of all professionals involved.

Confidentiality and Privilege for Lawyers

The Kansas Rules of Professional Conduct (KRPC) are the rules that govern legal professionals' ethical behavior in the practice of law. According to KRPC Rule 1.6, the lawyer may not reveal without the consent of the client, any information related to the representation of the client except as reasonably expected in the pursuit of the objectives of the client.¹ A violation of the KRPC could generate a disciplinary action for the lawyer.

Times When an Advocate Might Be Present in the Attorney/Client Meeting

When working with survivors of sexual and domestic violence, the context of their experience can have a significant impact on their civil and criminal legal options. In order to effectively pursue a case, attorneys must gather information regarding the history and context of their clients' experiences. The wide range of emotions and responses experienced as a result of sexual and domestic violence can hinder communication and limit understanding and access to information essential to your client's legal needs and possible remedies. Victim blaming attitudes and negative past experiences with the helping systems may act as an additional communication barrier.

It is essential that a client be able and willing to fully disclose the details and context of their situation. In order to address these communication barriers, it can be helpful to involve and/or facilitate the involvement of an advocate. There are a variety of ways an advocate can provide assistance to a client without threatening privilege. An advocate can attend the meeting and wait outside the office in case a client needs a break or support. An advocate can meet with a client before or after a meeting to help survivors cope with the emotions brought out with disclosure. An advocate can help a survivor formulate timelines and prioritize details important to share with their attorney. Utilizing a support person to address communication barriers is effective only if your client desires this support. Attorneys should discuss this as an option prior to involving any support person.

Advocacy and Privilege

In many states, communication between domestic and sexual violence survivors and program advocates is privileged. However, in Kansas, it is not. Therefore, advocates and program records may be subject to subpoena. As a result, programs may have policies that limit what information is written in a client's file and they usually attempt to quash any subpoenas for an advocate's testimony and agency records. Asking an advocate to testify on behalf of or against a client is a discouraged practice. It is important for a survivor to be able to rely on the advocate without worrying whether the advocate will be asked to testify. Attorneys should thoroughly explore how they might get evidence from sources other than the advocate or program.

▲ Representing Survivors

Protection Order Filings

Often, attorneys become involved in a protection order proceeding after a victim has already filed the petition and sought a temporary protection order. If there are problems in a client's petition, the attorney can still amend the petition for the client's benefit.

It is important for the client's safety for the client to be informed before paperwork is served on the defendant. In domestic and sexual violence, stalking, and human trafficking cases, service can increase the danger of further abuse. Victims need to be prepared to do extra safety planning when a defendant is being served.

Working with Survivors

In a protection order proceeding, the bulk of the case often depends on the victim's testimony. The victim's credibility can therefore be imperative. Victims of domestic and sexual violence, stalking, and human trafficking often suffer significant trauma that can affect their ability to clearly and effectively tell their story. Signs of trauma in a victim may include:

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 7: Civil Attorneys & Protection Orders

- Victim does not talk about experiences in a linear manner and may sometimes not seem to make sense;
- Victim shows little emotion when discussing what would have been a highly emotional experience;
- Victim seems detached or absent during meetings; and
- Victim is unable to remember key details of the abuse.²

When a victim is experiencing trauma, working with a victim advocate can be beneficial for both the victim and the attorney.

Protection Orders, Divorce Restraining Orders, and Consolidation

Sometimes it may be appropriate to consolidate a protection order and a divorce proceeding. It is important, however, that the protection order is not ignored or dismissed. A restraining order in a divorce case is not the same as a protection order issued pursuant to K.S.A. 60-3101 et seq. or K.S.A. 60-31a01 et seq. A victim needs to know that they are very different orders. When a petition is filed pursuant to the PFAA or PFSSAHTA, the trial court is required to conduct an evidentiary hearing.³ The purpose of these Acts is to protect victims of domestic violence, stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking,⁴ and orders issued under the PFAA and PFSSAHTA can differ in “their purpose, scope, and period of time that they are effective.”⁵ These Acts give the court broader authority to meet the safety needs of the victim.⁶ Furthermore, an order under the PFAA or PFSSAHTA can be issued for up to one year with the possibility of extension.⁷ In a divorce proceeding, “the trial court’s jurisdiction to enter a restraining order ends when the divorce is finalized.”⁸

Protection orders should also be issued in the form approved by the Kansas Judicial Council. These forms are created to include the proper statutory language set out in the PFAA and PFSSAHTA. These forms were also created to be recognizable on their face and across state lines as protective orders. Using these uniform orders further aids court staff and sheriff’s departments in recognizing the need to enter the order into the NCIC, aids law enforcement both in and out of Kansas in determining the validity of an order and provisions it contains, and aids prosecutors in entering these elements into a criminal case on a violation of the order.

Modifying Orders

If the terms of the order are not working for a victim, an attorney can seek modification of an order by filing a motion to modify the order.⁹ Often, an initial parenting or exchange plan may end up not meeting the needs of the parties. Parenting and child exchange are often used by abusers to continue tactics of abuse after a victim has a protection order. An order that states, “Visitation as parties agree” or “Contact only as to the children” can give the defendant means to harass the victim. For instance, the defendant may call 20 times a day, but if he mentions the kids in each call, it may be harder to determine if there is a violation. If the terms of the order allow the defendant to continue the abuse, modification of the order to reflect more specifically what exchanges and contact regarding the children will look like is a helpful way to increase the victim's safety.

If a victim no longer wants the protection order, it is important they know that they must go back to the court to have the expiration date of the order modified or otherwise dismissed. Orders do not cease to exist because a victim decides it is no longer needed. Furthermore, consent to contact is not a defense to the violation of a protective order. A defendant who contacts a victim with a valid order still in place can still be prosecuted for violating the order even though the victim may no longer want the order.

Extension of Orders

Attorneys should advise their clients of the protection order extension process. Extensions should be filed before the expiration of the final protection order in the district where the original order was sought.¹⁰ There are currently two types of extensions on protection orders.¹¹ The first is available to anyone who has a PFA or PFSSAHT final order. This order is issued solely at the discretion of the court.¹² There is no need to prove that the defendant violated the existing order in order to be granted the extension.¹³ The extension can be issued for an additional period of not less than one year and not more than three years.¹⁴

The second type of extension is available to plaintiffs who can prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant violated a valid protection order or was convicted of a person felony where the protected party or a member of the protected party’s family or household was the victim.¹⁵ To seek this order, the plaintiff needs to file a verified motion alleging the violation or conviction and have the defendant personally served with that motion.¹⁶ Then there must be an evidentiary hearing much like an evidentiary hearing for a final order. If the court finds this burden met, the court shall issue an order for no less than two years and up to the lifetime of the defendant.¹⁷ A violation of this extended order is a felony crime.¹⁸

▲ Leaving Kansas

Criminal Sanctions for Fleeing with Children

Kansas criminal law includes two crimes that may impact survivors who need to flee with their children. “Interference with parental custody”¹⁹ and “aggravated interference with parental custody”²⁰ may both be implicated even if the abused parent believes fleeing with the children is necessary to protect them or to protect herself from physical or sexual abuse. Fleeing across state lines, taking the child out of state without the consent of the other parent having custody, or refusing to return the child from an out-of-state visit may all result in felony charges. These laws create a very serious Catch-22 for the protective parent who believes that they will only be safe if they flee or hide with the children. Unfortunately, Kansas law does not specifically provide a defense for victims of domestic or sexual violence. Attorneys should discuss these crimes with the protective parent as they are making the decision about whether to flee or hide with the children in order to avoid further abuse, stalking or sexual assault.

Knowing how these crimes are enforced by the county or district attorney in the home state jurisdiction could be critical when providing legal advice to an adult victim.

Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act (UCCJEA)

The UCCJEA was developed and passed in an effort to create consistent custody and enforcement decisions across the country. Generally, the UCCJEA states that a Kansas court has jurisdiction to make an initial child-custody determination if Kansas is the “home state” of a child. “Home state” means “the state in which a child lived with a parent or a person acting as a parent for at least six consecutive months immediately before the commencement of the child-custody proceedings.”²¹ Absent a “home state,” the law provides that the courts may examine whether there are other justifications for taking jurisdiction such as “substantial connections.”²² Once a Kansas court takes initial jurisdiction over the child custody proceeding, it will have exclusive and continuing jurisdiction over the custody matters. This jurisdiction may continue until neither of the parties or the children remain in the state.²³

The UCCJEA contains several provisions that may be particularly important considerations for the attorney representing an abused parent or child. A Kansas court can take “temporary emergency jurisdiction (TEJ) if the child is present in this state and ... it is necessary in an emergency to protect the child because the child, or a sibling or parent of the child, is subjected to or threatened with mistreatment or abuse.”²⁴ The jurisdiction of the court in these circumstances is “temporary.” However, if there is not a prior custody order in the home state and no order is issued while the child is residing in the state under the temporary emergency orders, the TEJ state could become the home state if that possibility is provided for in the TEJ order.²⁵ If a child custody order is commenced in the child’s home state while the TEJ orders are pending, the courts “shall immediately communicate” with each other “to resolve the emergency, protect the safety of the parties and the child, and determine a period for the duration of the temporary order.”²⁶ The courts may determine that jurisdiction can be moved to the TEJ state based on other considerations set forth in the UCCJEA.²⁷ Testimony or documentation of injuries to the parent or the child may be helpful in convincing the court of the risk of returning. Nonetheless, if the home state court refuses to decline jurisdiction in favor of the TEJ state, jurisdiction over the custody proceeding will remain with the home state and the abused parent and child may have to return to the home state to either litigate the proceeding or under any orders issued. If the parent and child are required to return to the home state to further litigate the proceedings, the court may enter any orders necessary to ensure the safety of the child and of any person ordered to appear.²⁸

Uniform Child Abduction Prevention Act (UCAPA)²⁹

Kansas enacted the UCAPA effective July 1, 2007. UCAPA is, in effect, a part of the UCCJEA and it is intended to address “wrongfully interfering” with the other parents’ rights to access to the child(ren). UCAPA allows a court on its own motion or on motion of a party to order “any abduction prevention measures ... if the court finds that the evidence establishes a credible risk of abduction of the child.”³⁰ A petition filed under UCAPA must contain specific information about the child and the perceived risk of abduction, including whether a prior action to prevent “abduction or domestic violence” has been filed by a party.³¹

The factors to determine the risk of abduction include but are not limited to any previous abductions or attempted abduction or any prior threats to abduct. Of particular concern to victims of domestic or sexual violence are the factors that show any activities that may indicate a “planned abduction,” including any of the following:

- quitting a job,
- selling a home,
- terminating a lease,
- closing bank accounts or liquidating assets,
- applying for travel documents or passports,
- obtaining the child’s birth certificate, school or medical records,
- engaging in domestic violence, stalking or child abuse,
- refusing to follow a child-custody order,
- lacking strong ties to the United States,
- demonstrating a likelihood to take a child to a country that is not a party to the Hague Convention,
- undergoing immigration or citizenship status change that would adversely impact the ability to remain in the United States,
- living in the U.S. after having an application for U.S. Citizenship denied,
- forging documents to obtain or attempt to obtain identifying documents or travel documents such as passport, social security number, or driver’s license,

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 7: Civil Attorneys & Protection Orders

- using multiple names to attempt to mislead or defraud, or
- engaging in any other conduct that the court considers relevant to the risk of abduction.³²

All of the above factors may also appear to implicate an abused parent who is attempting to flee violence with their children. Nonetheless, the court is also required to consider “any evidence that the respondent believed in good faith that the respondent’s conduct was necessary to avoid imminent harm to the child or respondent and any other evidence that may be relevant to whether the respondent may be permitted to remove or retain the child.”³³

Attorneys will need to actively consider the intent behind UCAPA and its protections for victims of domestic violence. Petitions filed by the abuser seeking to keep the adult victim from fleeing to safety should be strongly challenged and litigated so that the purpose of UCAPA can be fully realized. UCAPA can be a helpful tool for abused parents who are seeking to keep the abuser from abducting the children; however, unless these petitions are actively litigated, UCAPA could also become an unintended tool for abusers.

UCAPA also includes a section on “provisions and measures to prevent abduction” that outlines the types of provisions a court must or may include.³⁴ It also allows for the court to issue an ex parte warrant to take physical custody of the child if there is a “credible risk” that the child is “imminently likely to be wrongfully removed.”³⁵

Finally, the court’s “abduction prevention order” may remain in effect until the child reaches the age of majority, is emancipated, or until the court otherwise determines.³⁶

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 8: Law Enforcement & Protection Orders

For a protection order to be more than a piece of paper, it must be enforced. Therefore, law enforcement plays one of the most important roles in the protection order process. How law enforcement responds to reports of violations is key to how both the victim and the defendant view the order and its seriousness. This section looks at the intersection of law enforcement involvement with the protection order process.

▲ Responding to a Call

Law enforcement may be called to respond to incidents of domestic and sexual violence, stalking, and human trafficking. Often, law enforcement provides victims with information about local victim advocacy programs, may do a lethality assessment, and may suggest the victim seek a protection order. These are important parts of law enforcement's response to victims, however, law enforcement must be careful not to use the suggestion of a protection order as a quick response to any dispute, such as disagreements between neighbors, and should recognize that protection orders are not right for everyone.

▲ Service

Protection orders restrict the defendant from certain actions that may otherwise be lawful. The PFAA and PFSSAHTA take such restrictions very seriously and therefore require that copies of the petition, summons, and temporary protection orders be personally served on the defendant by an authorized agent of the court.¹ This insures that the defendant is awarded the proper notice of the allegations against him or her and of the time and location of his or her opportunity to present a defense to the allegations before a final order is issued by the court. Personal service is required in order to protect the constitutional due process rights of the defendant.

1 K.S.A. 2016 Supp. 60-303(d)(3).

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 8: Law Enforcement & Protection Orders

Generally, this service is done by designated members of the local sheriff's department;² however, other law enforcement officers may find themselves responding to a call where a temporary order has been issued but service has not been completed. In these incidences, it may be possible for the law enforcement officer to serve a copy of the paperwork on the defendant. The officer would not be able to arrest the defendant for violation of that order before service has been completed, but that does not prohibit making an arrest on any other possible crimes established during the call. When an officer serves a defendant, it is important to read through the paperwork and provide a return of service to the proper department.

▲ National Crime Information Center (NCIC)

The sheriff's office in the county where a PFA order is issued is required by statute to enter the order into the NCIC. There is no specific statute ordering the entrance of PFSSAHT orders, but many departments choose to enter these orders as well. Though the NCIC can be a helpful tool for law enforcement, just because an order is not in the NCIC does not mean it doesn't exist or cannot be enforced. Law enforcement can enforce an order when they have probable cause to believe that it exists and is valid.³ If presented with a copy of a protection order, a law enforcement officer should enforce a protection order if it is valid on its face. This means that the order includes the names of the parties, the date the order was issued, an expiration date that has not yet occurred, the name of the issuing court, and the signature of the judge.⁴

▲ Violations of a Protection Order

Violations of protection orders can seem to be minor or inconsequential actions to those unfamiliar with the protection order process. To understand and appreciate that these acts are crimes, it is important to remember the purpose of protection orders.

▲ Protection Order Purpose

The Protection From Abuse Act (PFAA) was created “to promote the protection of victims of domestic violence,”⁵ and the Protection From Stalking, Sexual Assault, or Human Trafficking Act (PFSSAHTA) was created “to protect victims of stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking.”⁶ For a judge to issue a temporary protection order, they must make a finding that good cause has been shown to issue that order. For a final protection order, the petitioner must prove to the judge the allegations of abuse, stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking more likely than not happened, and the defendant has had an opportunity to present evidence and question witnesses in his or her defense. It is within this context and the history between the parties that the judge issues a protection order. If the order is granted, the defendant is prohibited from certain future acts by the judge because of the defendant’s past behavior towards the protected party. A defendant’s violation of a protective order is not only the continuation of already established abuse, assaultive, stalking, or trafficking behavior, but is also the disobeying of the judge’s order and the dignity of the court.

▲ Who Can Violate a Protection Order?

As mentioned above, a defendant is afforded due process by being personally served with the paperwork and being given the opportunity to confront the can violate a protection order.

plaintiff at a hearing and present evidence in his or her defense. It is after the defendant has waived those rights or the plaintiff has proven their allegations of abuse, stalking, sexual assault, or human trafficking by a preponderance of the evidence that an order is issued. For the plaintiff to be subject to the same order, Kansas statute requires that a written cross or counterclaim be filed and served on the plaintiff, that the plaintiff be afforded that same notice and opportunity to be heard as given the defendant, and that the judge makes a finding that both parties acted as primary aggressors in the abuse and that neither acted in self-defense.⁷

Furthermore, a United States Tenth Circuit case has addressed whether a protected party can violate their own order.⁸ In Shroff v. Spellman, Officer Spellman arrested Ms. Shroff for violating her own protection order. The court denied the officer qualified immunity in a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim finding he had violated Ms. Shroff's constitutional rights by arresting her for violating her own order.⁹

▲ What is a Violation of a Protection Order?

According to K.S.A. 21-5924, a violation of a protective order is knowingly violating a PFA; PFSSAHT; or a restraining order out of a criminal case, a divorce proceeding, or a child in need of care case. A violation is a class A person misdemeanor unless it is a three year to lifetime PFA order or PFSSAHT order, in which case a violation is a level 6, person felony.¹⁰ What violates any specific order depends on the language of that order. Generally, PFA and PFSSAHT orders are issued on a standard form approved by the Kansas Judicial Council. Much of the language will be the same, but specific provisions can vary. Most judges order that the defendant have no contact, either directly or indirectly, with the protected party. There is no need for the contact to be threatening.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 8: Law Enforcement & Protection Orders

According to the Kansas Court of Appeals, even a “hello” at a public store is contact in violation of a protective order.¹¹ Furthermore, a protected party’s consent to contact with the defendant is not a defense to a protective order violation.¹² Only the court can modify the conditions of the order.¹³ If circumstances have changed, a motion to the court by a party asking for modification of the order is the appropriate means to alter the order.

Victims should be encouraged to report violations of protection orders to law enforcement. For victims to feel safe reporting violations, law enforcement should consider their own demeanor when working with victims. Victims may wonder what an officer will think if they call for “just a hello.” Reassuring the victim that reporting the violation was the right thing to do encourages the victim to continue reporting violations.

More and more, violations are being made by electronic communication, such as text messages, voicemails, emails, and posts on social media sites. When a victim reports such a violation, it is important for law enforcement to listen to, look at, and document these communications. Also, the officer should note any phone numbers or email addresses that sent the messages.

▲ Felony Stalking

Under K.S.A. 21-5427(a)(3), when a defendant knowingly violates a protective order in a manner that would reasonably cause persons to fear for their safety or the safety of a member of their immediate family or household member, and that conduct actually places the targeted person in fear, that violation is considered felony stalking. A protective order includes a PFA, PFSSAHT, or a restraining order out of a criminal case, a divorce proceeding, or a child in need of care case. If the defendant had been previously served with the protective order, they are presumed to have acted knowingly.¹⁴ The difference between a protective order violation and felony stalking is the element of fear; therefore, a protective order violation is a lesser included offense to felony stalking. The first violation is a level 9, person felony, while subsequent violations are a level 5, person felony.

▲ Immediate Family

According to the statute, immediate family includes any of the following:

- Parent,
- Stepparent,
- Child,
- Stepchild,
- Sibling,
- Spouse,
- Grandparent,
- Any person residing in the household of the victim, or
- Any person involved in an intimate relationship with the targeted person.¹⁵

14 K.S.A. 2016 Supp. 21-5427(c).

15 K.S.A. 2016 Supp. 21-5427(f)(5).

▲ Fear

Whether it was reasonable to expect that the victim would be placed in fear by the act is dependent on the history between the defendant and the victim.¹⁶ Acts that may not immediately seem like they would cause a person to be fearful become so when placed in the context of the relationship between the victim and the defendant.

Law enforcement can play a significant role in helping establish that the victim was placed in actual fear. Noting the demeanor of the victim or any behaviors noticed that would tend to show the victim was in fear at the time of the incident can help the prosecutor show that the victim was placed in fear for their safety or the safety of a member of their immediate family or household member.

The cases below are listed by year.

PFA, children, definition of bodily injury

Paida v. Leach, 260 Kan. 292, 917 P.2d 1342 (1996).

Paida appealed from a denial of a PFA petition that she filed on behalf of her children, who were in her ex-husband's custody.

- The court distinguished between domestic violence against children and domestic violence against spouses. The court said that the trial court should determine whether the plaintiff has shown abuse by looking at the evidence in light of all of the circumstances in each individual case. Included in these circumstances are the age of the alleged victim and his or her relationship to the alleged abuser.
- The court held that the Protection From Abuse Act was not intended to unnecessarily interfere in the parent/child relationship unless there is a clear need to protect the child. Therefore, the Act should only be used when parental discipline causes more than minor or inconsequential injury to the child.
- The court defined bodily injury to require a finding of substantial physical pain or an impairment of physical condition.

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

PFA, children, definition of bodily injury, attorney fees

Barnett v. Barnett, 24 Kan. App. 2d 342, 945 P.2d 870 (1997).

Father appealed PFA order entered against him. His ex-wife had petitioned for a PFA protecting their 13-year-old son based on an incident in which the father pushed the son and hit him with a switch from a tree.

- The court held that the son did not suffer substantial physical pain or physical impairment as required by Paida, reversing the district court’s decision.
 - Father testified that he intended to inflict some pain on his son but that he did not intend to injure him.
 - Son indicated that he was not in fear of imminent bodily injury, he was just afraid the day of the incident.
 - The mother did not take the son to the hospital or physician and refused a police officer’s offer to call an ambulance because the mother and son thought it was unnecessary.
 - The father did not break his son’s skin.
 - The son did not testify about any enduring effects from the incident.
- There was also an argument as to whether the district court should have awarded attorney fees to his ex-wife since the underlying order was erroneous.
 - The court referred to the legislature’s “intent that the Act ‘be liberally construed... to facilitate access to judicial protection for the victims of domestic violence.’” at p.354.
 - The court held that using this logic “would place a chilling effect upon the bringing of borderline cases to the attention of the court system.” at p.354.

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

PFA, definition of abuse, standard within family, timing of abuse

Trolinger v. Trolinger, 30 Kan. App. 2d 192, 42 P.3d 157 (2001) (petition for review denied).

Arby Trolinger appeals the PFA order issued against him protecting his wife Valerie and her minor child.

- The court referred to the wording that “the Act shall be liberally construed ‘to promote the protection of victims of domestic violence from bodily injury or threats of bodily injury and to facilitate access to judicial protection for the victims.’” at p.198.
- The court described its reluctance to involve itself in PFA cases because the cases often develop in emergency situations and the judgment of the trial court may involve risk to the lives of the parties involved. The court said that the district court is in a better position to view the parties and make a real-life judgment on the situation.
- The court held that the trial court was not required to find substantial pain and impairment prior to concluding that there was abuse as a matter of law. Rather, the trial court must look at all the circumstances and find abuse if it is shown by a preponderance of the evidence.
- Making reference to Paida, the court said that there should be the same standard of abuse within a family because they live together and to apply different standards would undermine the order issued to one member or another of a family group.
- Regarding Arby’s argument that the alleged actions of abuse were not recent in time and did not present an ongoing risk, the court held that these are factors to be considered, but they should not be controlling. The court said that it would be contrary to the intent of the law if an order could only be issued if the acts of violence were recent and presented an immediate threat to the victims seeking protection.

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

- The court held that the Protection From Abuse Act does not require focusing on the timing of either recent abuse or future abuse prior to issuing a PFA order.

PFA denial, attorney fees

Lisk-Boydston v. Boydston, No. 90,058, 80P.3d 1201, 2003 WL 22990200 (Kan. App. Dec. 19, 2003) (unpublished opinion).

Lisk-Boydston appealed the district court’s decision denying her petition for a PFA and appealed the court’s awarding Boydston with attorney fees and costs.

- Regarding the denial of the petition for a PFA, the court said that the facts surrounding the incidents alleged by the plaintiff in the petition were highly controverted and that the district court considered the surrounding circumstances and the credibility of Lisk-Boydston’s witnesses in determining that the plaintiff and her witnesses were not credible.
- Regarding the awarding of attorney fees and costs to the defendant, the court referred to the statutory scheme of the PFA Act, referred to the wording that the “act shall be liberally construed to promote the protection of victims of domestic violence from bodily injury or threats of bodily injury and to facilitate access to judicial protection for the victims whether represented by counsel or proceeding pro se.” at p.4. The court held that, in this case, the court did not abuse its discretion in making specific findings that the plaintiff brought about “such a frivolous action” and awarded fees. at p.4. The court did, however, add that courts should be careful when they award attorney fees against plaintiffs in PFA orders because it could result in legitimate victims of abuse not seeking protection under the Act.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

PFA, evidence, lapse of time between abuse and filing

Brock v. Brandewyne, No. 91,211, 94 P.3d 738, WL 1716416 (Kan. Ct. App. July 30, 2004) (unpublished opinion).

Brandewyne appealed the issuance of a Protection Order and a finding that she was in contempt of the Protection Order issued on behalf of her ex-husband, Brock.

- Brandewyne argued that evidence of letters sent to third parties who were not an intimate partner or household member should not be admitted. The court held that to whom the letters were sent was of little relevance, that as long as the threatening language in them was in reference to the plaintiff, who did meet the definition of intimate partner or household member, the letters were admissible.
- Brandewyne also argued that there was too great a lapse in time between when the letters were written and when Brock filed the PFA petition for the letters to contain threats of imminent bodily harm. The court cited Trolinger and said that the trial court was aware of the timing of the events and presumably considered this when it noted the long-term history and ongoing animosity of the parties.

PFS, constitutionality

Smith v. Martens, 279 Kan. 242, 106 P.3d 28 (2005).

Martens appealed a PFS order issued against him protecting his ex-wife arguing that the Protection From Stalking Act is unconstitutionally vague on its face and overbroad.

- The court held that the statute was not unconstitutionally vague on its face and did not substantially infringe upon First Amendment protected speech.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

PFA, right to evidentiary hearing, PFA/divorce orders

Myers v. Myers, No. 92,628, 2005 WL 1500923 (Kan. Ct. App. June 24, 2005) (unpublished decision).

Cheryl Myers appeals from the trial court’s denial of her petition for a PFA order against her husband Michael. Among other arguments, Cheryl argued that the court erred in dismissing her petition without setting it for an evidentiary hearing. Michael argues that the Protection From Abuse Act does not contemplate that there would be a divorce proceeding at the same time as a PFA proceeding.

- The court refers to the intent of the PFA Act stating that the Act “shall be liberally construed to promote the protection of victims of domestic violence from bodily injury or threats of bodily injury and to facilitate access to judicial protection for the victims, whether represented by counsel or proceeding pro se.” at p.6. The court said that this language indicates that the Act was enacted specifically to protect victims of domestic violence.
- The court held that once Cheryl submitted and filed her petition following all statutory requirements, the trial court was required to conduct an evidentiary hearing. The district court erred in not holding such a hearing.
- The court also held that although there are some overlapping protections in the PFAA and the divorce statutes, the PFAA clearly provides greater protection for abuse victims. Mainly these differences are in the amount of time an order can be in effect and the matters that the orders can address.

Violation of a PFA order, evidence

State v. Curls, 36 Kan. App. 2d 547, 145 P.3d 73 (2006).

Curls appealed his conviction for violating a PFA order, arguing an insufficiency of evidence. The violation was based on multiple phone calls made by Curls to Murdock, the woman offered protection by the order. The police officers on the scene refused to listen to messages left on Murdock’s phone.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

- The court said that the officers declining to listen to the messages after Murdock offered for them to do so, was curious police work. The court said that a better practice would be for investigating officers to confirm the reported messages when they are given the opportunity to do so.

PFS, factors considered, evidence, Internet searches.

Wentland v. Uhlarik, 37 Kan. App. 2d 734, 159 P. 3d 1035 (2007).

Uhlarik appealed the district court’s final PFS order, arguing that the order was not based on substantial competent evidence.

- The court noted K.S.A. 60-31a01(b), which says the Protection From Stalking Act “shall be liberally construed to protect victims of stalking and to facilitate access to judicial protection for stalking victims.” at p.1.
- The court said a reasonable person must look at the totality of circumstances and the relationship and history between the parties in determining whether a reasonable person would be in fear of their safety.
- The court looked at the context of all the surrounding facts as well as the history of the defendant’s repeated harassment of the plaintiff when determining course of conduct.
- The court reaffirmed that a district court may take judicial notice of its own records, including prior PFA and PFS petitions and orders.
- The court held that there is no authority limiting testimony at trial to the facts as they existed at the time the petition was filed; therefore, the plaintiff was able to introduce evidence of behavior that occurred prior to her filing the petition for a PFS that she was unaware of when she filed the petition.
- The court said the introduction of evidence of a great number of Internet searches done on the plaintiff by the defendant were admissible to show an ongoing course of conduct as well as to show his intent and to show that these encounters were not mere coincidences.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

- The court held that the defendant’s past harassment and ongoing infatuation with the plaintiff coupled with recent encounters with the plaintiff were enough evidence for the district court to enter a final PFS order against the defendant.

Consent not a defense to Violation of a Protection Order.

State v. Branson, 38 Kan. App. 2d 484, 167 P. 3d 370 (2007). (Petition for review denied April 23, 2008).

Defendant was convicted at a bench trial of Violation of a Protective Order. The defendant argued that the trial court erred for failing to consider the consent of the victim to the contact as an affirmative defense.

- The Court of Appeals noted that, “Nothing in the language of [Violation of a Protective Order] suggests a legislative intent to excuse an abuser just because the victim later consents to contact in violation of the PFA order.” at p. 488.
- The Court of Appeals went on to say, “Branson cites no authority that renders consent an affirmative defense to a charge of violation of a Protective Order in Kansas, and our research reveals none.” at pp. 488- 489. Therefore, the Court of Appeals concluded, “The trial court did not err in refusing to consider a consent defense in this case.” at p. 489. The Court reasoned that only the court can modify or nullify its own order.
- The Court of Appeals further reasoned that the legislative “decision to criminalize a violation of a PFA order reflects a concern for the public peace.” at p. 488. The Court noted that the crime of violating a Protective Order is placed in Article 38 of Crimes and Punishments, which is entitled, “Crimes Affecting Governmental Functions.”

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

The District Court abused its discretion by failing to set Plaintiff's PFA Petition for hearing. Crim v. Crim, 40 Kan. App. 2d 367, 196 P. 3d 375 (2008).

Plaintiff filed a pro se petition seeking a Protection From Abuse order against the defendant. On the same day the petition was filed the District Court dismissed the plaintiff's petition, citing, "insufficient allegations for jurisdiction" and directing that the "petitioner should seek to modify the custody/visitation temporary orders in the divorce case ..." at p. 369. The Plaintiff, with counsel, filed a motion to set aside the dismissal of her petition. At the hearing on her motion the court stated that it thought there were certain things that had to be alleged in a petition for a protection order before the plaintiff was entitled to an evidentiary hearing on the petition. The court concluded that the allegations in plaintiff's petition, taken as true, did not meet the requirements of the Protection From Abuse Act.

- The Court of Appeals noted that, "The PFAA shall be liberally construed to promote the protection of victims of domestic violence ..." at p. 371. The Court of Appeals found sufficient facts alleged to confer jurisdiction, and noted: "As our court has previously stated in a related context, there is no bright-line rule that the victim must actually show that she or he has shed blood or suffered real physical pain in order to obtain an order which may avoid that outcome. Trolinger v. Trolinger, 30 Kan. App. 2d 192, 42 P. 3d 157 (2001) rev. denied 273 Kan. 1040 (2002)." at p. 372.
- Thus, the Court of Appeals found that the District Court abused its discretion by its erroneous legal interpretation of the PFAA.
- The facts in Plaintiff's petition were that the defendant had repeatedly called the plaintiff. The defendant left messages stating he would kick in the plaintiff's door if plaintiff did not call him back; he would let the children starve and freeze; and, he would make the plaintiff's parents pay. He followed the plaintiff in his car and blocked her path with his vehicle.

Violation of a Protection Order in a public place.

State of Kansas v. Gregg, 42 Kan. App. 2d 719, 221 P. 3d 596 (2009).

The defendant was convicted of violating a Protection From Abuse order. On appeal the defendant challenges the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the conviction. The defendant claims that the district court misunderstood evidence presented at trial. The defendant does not deny, however, saying hello to the plaintiff while at Wal-Mart.

- The Court of Appeals concluded, “ ... Greg admitted that he said ‘hello’ to his mother. This evidence-without consideration of the disputed testimony on cross-examination- was sufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Gregg had contacted his mother in contravention of the PFA and in violation of K.S.A.[21-5924].” at p. 720.
- The Court of Appeals affirmed the decision of the district court.

Violation of Protection Order while jailed.

State of Kansas v. Fielden, 42 Kan. App. 2d 710, 217 P. 3d 986 (2007).

The defendant was convicted of violating a Protection From Abuse order, which was issued and violated while the defendant was jailed. Three cases were joined for trial at the district court. The opinion of the Court of Appeals in this case centered on the issues of joinder and prosecutorial misconduct. Often victims are told by different systems that they do not need a Protection Order because the defendant is incarcerated, bond conditions will protect them, or because the criminal case makes a Protection Order unnecessary. This case demonstrates how a Protection Order can be useful and important for victims even when the defendant is incarcerated, or a criminal case is pending.

- The facts of one of the three cases joined for trial was that the defendant violated a Protection Order by driving by the victim’s residence slowly honking the horn. At trial the defendant “alleged that Copeland had overreacted to his actions on September 11, 2004, and driving on the public street was not a prohibited contact.” at p. 713. These facts resulted in a conviction in the district court. The sufficiency of these facts were not challenged on appeal. Fielden’s conviction for violation of the Protection Order was affirmed.

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

- Most Protection Orders restrain the defendant from “entering in or coming around the premises of the victim/plaintiff.” Victims are often told that nothing can be done when the defendant drives by their home, or regularly circles around the victim’s premises. This case would demonstrate differently.

No qualified immunity for police officer who wrongly arrested protected party for violation of her own order.

Shroff v. Spellman, 604 F.3d 1179 (10th Cir. 2010).

Officer Spellman appealed a denial of summary judgment, based on his defense of qualified immunity as a police officer. Spellman arrested Ms. Shroff for violating her own PFA order and she was subsequently strip searched. The order in question restrained Mr. Kruse from being within 100 feet of Ms. Shroff. It was presented to Officer Spellman. Ms. Shroff informed him it was not a reciprocal order.

- The Court of Appeals affirmed the district court’s conclusion that Officer Spellman arrested Ms. Shroff without probable cause and subsequent to the arrest subjected her to a strip search in violation of her Fourth Amendment rights.
 - Qualified immunity does not apply when the plaintiff demonstrates on the facts alleged that the defendant violated her constitutional or statutory rights AND that the constitutional right was clearly established at the time of the incident.
- The record contained no support that Officer Spellman had probable cause to arrest Ms. Shroff for being in contempt of the order restraining Mr. Kruse nor did the order authorize him to arrest a protected party.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

- Officer Spellman alleged he arrested Ms. Shroff for violating the provision of the restraining order that said the protected person “cannot give the Restrained Person permission to change or ignore this Order.” at p. 1188.
- None of the parties interviewed ever alleged Ms. Shroff gave permission to Mr. Kruse to violate the Protection Order.
- Further, the order does not authorize the arrest of the protected party for giving the restrained person permission to change or ignore the order.
- What is a “clearly established” constitutional right should be determined by whether it would be clear to a reasonable officer that his conduct was unlawful in that situation.
 - The court found that no reasonable officer would have determined that he had probable cause to arrest Ms. Shroff after reading the restraining order and being informed that Ms. Shroff was not a restrained party.

Violation of a Protective Order, felony stalking

State v. Wilson, No. 104,060, 2012 WL 401602 (Kan. Ct. App. Feb. 3, 2012) petition for review filed (Mar. 2, 2012) (unpublished decision).

Wilson appealed a conviction of felony stalking for communicating with his former girlfriend, Obeidat, in violation of a criminal no contact order. Wilson called the home of Obeidat’s father. Obeidat, who had been staying with her father, answered the phone. Wilson called her a bitch and told her he was coming to kill her. She then received 20 calls from the same telephone number. At trial, Wilson admitted to calling her and acknowledged that he was aware of the no-contact order.

- Wilson’s first argument was that stalking was an alternative means crime. Specifically, the “intentionally or recklessly” language of the statute presented alternative means of stalking. The court, however, held that intentionally and recklessly are different mental states, not different physical actions. Despite which mental state was employed, the effect on the victim would be the same and “therefore do[es] not define different ways of stalking someone. The offense entails communicating with a person in violation of an order in a manner that causes that person to fear for his or her personal safety.” at p. *2.

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

- Wilson then attacked the conviction on the grounds that the prosecution failed to include the lesser included offense of violation of a Protective Order in the jury instruction. The Court specifically held that “[f]or the purpose of this appeal, the key difference between stalking and violating a Protective Order is the impact of the communication or contact on the victim. For stalking, the victim reasonably must fear for his or her safety. Violating a Protective Order requires no similar reaction from the victim.” at p. *3. As the instructions included the element of fear and the jury convicted on that instruction, they would not likely have acquitted based on the lesser included offense.
- The court further held, despite Wilson arguing otherwise, that the previous incident of aggravated battery “was relevant and admissible in this case to show that Obeidat was placed in fear by Wilson’s telephone calls and that a reasonable person in her position would be fearful.” at p. *4.

One year extension of a PFA, judicial discretion

Jordan v. Jordan, 47 Kan. App.2d 300, 274 P.3d 657 (2012).

Roy Jordan appealed the extension of his estranged wife’s PFA order. His wife acknowledged at a hearing on the motion that Roy had not physically harmed her or had any direct contact with her since the original order was issued but that was still in fear of him. The trial court granted her motion for extension based on her continued fear of Roy. On appeal, Roy argued that there was not substantial and competent evidence to support the extension.

- The PFAA says a PFA “may” be extended for an additional year upon motion of the plaintiff. Based on the plain language of the statute, the Court of Appeals found that trial courts have the discretion to extend PFA orders when they are “within the bounds of judicial discretion.” at p. 306. The district court did not abuse its discretion when it extended the order based on the subjective fear of the protected party. The district judge who also issued the original order was in the best position to know if an extension was necessary.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

Violation of a Protective Order, felony stalking

State v. Killingsworth, No. 104,690, 2012 WL 1759398 (Kan. Ct. App. May 11, 2012) (unpublished decision).

Defendant appealed his convictions of Protection Order violation and felony stalking. Cooper sought and received a PFS against his girlfriend’s ex-boyfriend, Killingsworth. After being served with the order, Killingsworth appeared across the street from his ex-girlfriend’s house and yelled at Cooper. A few days later, Killingsworth left a note on his ex-girlfriend’s porch telling him to stay away from his children and included a drawing of a dagger.

- Killingsworth argued that stalking was an alternative means crime and that the state had failed to support each alternative means with substantial evidence. The Court held that “intentionally or recklessly” were not alternative means by which an individual can commit a crime but are different criminal intents. Further, the Court found that “because the stalking statute lists separate and distinct acts, any one of which could have been the basis for Killingsworth’s stalking conviction, the crime presents a multiple acts issue rather than an alternative means issue ... In multiple acts cases, either the prosecutor must elect which act is the basis for the stalking charge, or the district court must direct the jury to be unanimous in deciding which act constitutes the crime.” at p. *6.
- Killingsworth also argued that he could not be convicted of both felony stalking and violation of a Protective Order because violation of a Protective Order is a lesser included offense of felony stalking. The court found that intentional conduct and violating a Protective Order are elements in both crimes but felony

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

stalking also requires more, that the victim is caused fear. Therefore, violation of a Protective Order is a lesser included offense of felony stalking. The court reversed the Protective Order violation conviction for as lesser included offense and remanded the stalking conviction based on the format of the jury instructions.

Violation of a Protective Order, evidence

State v. Hardy, No. 105,270, 2012 WL 2620547 (Kan. Ct. App. June 29, 2012) (unpublished decision).

Hardy was convicted by a jury of stalking in violation of a Protective Order. Hardy appealed based on insufficient evidence to sustain the conviction.

- The complaint and the jury instruction referred to a Protection Order prohibiting contact with Maxfield. However, the actual order was not admitted as evidence. The court found, “based strictly on the language of the complaint and the stalking instruction, the state failed to prove the existence of a Protective Order prohibiting Hardy from having contact with Maxfield.” at p. *3. The existence of an order was an element that must have been proven beyond a reasonable doubt.

Violation of a Protective Order, felony stalking, prior bad acts

State v. Dunn, Nos. 106,586, 106,587, 2012 WL 3290004 (Kan. Ct. App. Aug. 10, 2012) (unpublished decision).

Dunn appealed his conviction of stalking in violation of a Protective Order. Shaw had a Protective Order against her ex-boyfriend, Dunn. Shaw was a courier. Dunn appeared at a bank on her route. An employee testified that Shaw appeared nervous and scared. Shaw and Dunn later reconciled.

- Dunn challenged his stalking conviction, arguing insufficient evidence to support the conclusion that Shaw was placed in reasonable fear for her safety by the contact and not just in general fear of him. The Court found Dunn’s prior actions, including punching Shaw, pulling her hair, injuring her hands and feet, knocking down her door, and slashing her tires, were relevant in determining whether his actions were sufficient to place her in reasonable fear for her safety.

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

- The Court noted that “simply because Shaw subsequently reconciled with Dunn does not change the fact that she was in reasonable fear for her safety” at the bank incident at p. *3. The conviction was upheld. NOTE: The couple’s subsequent reconciliation does not affect the conviction. State v. Dunn, ___ Kan. ___, 375 P.3d 332 (Kan. 2016).

Violation of a Protective Order, necessity not a defense

State v. Hunt, 284 P.3d 375 (Kan. Ct. App. 2012).

Hunt admitted to violating a Protection From Abuse order prohibiting him from having contact with his wife. Hunt, however, appealed his conviction of violation of a Protective Order, claiming the common-law defense of necessity. Hunt’s wife, who had a Protection Order against him, became ill. Hunt drove his wife to the hospital. On the way home, he drove his wife to the district court to have her ask for the order to be dismissed. An administrative assistant testified that she asked Hunt to leave so she could speak with Hunt’s wife privately. According to the assistant, the wife said that she wasn’t dismissing the order of her own free will. As Hunt and his wife were in the courthouse hallway, a sheriff’s deputy arrested Hunt for violating an existing Protection Order. His attorney asked the district court to instruct the jury that his actions could be found to be justified if they were found to be necessary. The district court denied his request and Hunt appealed.

- The court noted that whether the common-law defense of necessity was recognized in Kansas was still undecided. The court determined that even if the defense was recognized in Kansas, it would not apply here. Hunt had legal alternatives to violating the law. The court held that his wife “had obtained the Protection Order without [Hunt’s] help, and she could have sought its modification or removal without his help.” at p. *4. The court also held that his wife could have driven herself, taken a taxi or bus, or taken an ambulance.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

Violation of a Protective Order, felony stalking, prior bad acts

State v. Alcorn, 285 P.3d 395 (Kan. Ct. App. 2012).

May received a Protection From Abuse order against his ex-girlfriend, Alcorn. May's mother also received a Protection From Stalking order against Alcorn. Alcorn was charged with several counts of stalking, violating a Protective Order, domestic battery, criminal damage to property and criminal trespass on multiple occasions. The court consolidated the charges into one case. Alcorn appealed based on the testimony at trial of her prior bad acts.

- The Court of Appeals noted that evidence of a person's prior bad acts could not be used to make the inference that he or she has a disposition to commit a crime to prove that he or she committed another crime. Such evidence can, however, be used to prove some other material fact. The court noted, though Kansas courts had not addressed whether prior acts could be used to establish reasonableness of fear in a stalking case, other jurisdictions with substantially similar stalking laws addressed it. The court declined to determine whether the district court erred in admitting this evidence as Alcorn was not convicted on the stalking charges but affirmed the Protective Order violation and criminal trespass convictions.

PFA, venue, threats through third party

Kreger v. Kreger, No. 107,425, 2012 WL 5869634 (Kan. Ct. App. Nov. 16, 2012) (unpublished decision).

Kristie and Leon Kreger were married and had two children together. Leon was in an accident leaving him with a severe head injury which caused him to experience mood swings and fits of rage. The court noted that Leon had never acted violently toward Kristie or the children, but he had broken furniture and damaged other property during outbursts. Leon accused Kristie of having an affair with Tom Johnson, a claim Johnson denied on the stand. While Leon was out of town, Kristie moved from Ford County to

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

Johnson County. Upon his return, Leon filed for divorce in Ford, receiving temporary custody of the couple's two children. He then repeatedly called Mr. Johnson, threatening to kill him as well as Kristie and the children. Kristie filed for a PFA in Johnson County, citing the threats made to Johnson in the petition. Kristie offered no evidence that Leon directly communicated any threats to her personally. Leon's attorney argued the PFA was being used merely as a way to get around the temporary custody orders out of the divorce. The court ultimately granted Kristie's PFA petition, ordering Leon to have no contact with her and limited supervised parenting with the children in Johnson County. Leon appealed.

- Leon first argued that Johnson County District court lacked venue to hear the PFA petition and that the action should have been brought in Ford County. The Court of Appeals, however, determined this argument “legally unfounded. The Act contains a specific provision, conferring jurisdiction, and hence venue, on ‘any district court.’ K.S.A. 60-3103. The provision also states that a person’s right to relief under the Act ‘shall not be affected by the person’s leaving the residence or household to avoid further abuse.’ K.S.A. 60-3103.” at pp. *5-6. Finally, the court noted that the legislature specifically stated within the act that it “must be ‘liberally construed to promote the protection of victims ... from threats of bodily injury and to facilitate access to judicial protections for victims.’ K.S.A. 60-3101(b).” at p. *6. Therefore, the court determined Johnson County had jurisdiction to enter the PFA.
- Next, Leon challenged the sufficiency of evidence. The court found that, though Leon communicated the direct threat of bodily harm to Mr. Johnson, not Kristie, Leon had every reason to believe Mr. Johnson would have conveyed that threat to Kristie. The Court of Appeals found this threat sufficient to issue the PFA.
- Leon then challenged the imminence of the fear the threat of harm caused as he lived in Ford County and Kristie and the children lived in Johnson County. The Appellate court determined that imminent is broader than immediate, holding “we doubt the legislature intended to immunize threats of bodily harm a husband might make to his estranged wife simply because they live in different locals or because some other circumstances might delay execution of the threat for several hours. A midnight telephone call from one separated spouse threatening to kill the other when the sun comes up ought to fit within the Act.” at pp. *11-12. The Court of Appeals upheld the issuance of the PFA.

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

NOTE: State v. Kendall, 300 Kan. 515, 331 P.3d 763 (2014) is a review of the judgment of the Court of Appeals unpublished opinion, State v. Kendall, No. 106,960, 2013 Kan. App. LEXIS 763 (Aug. 16, 2013), which appeared in the previous Kansas Protection Order Manual Kansas Law section. The Judgment was affirmed in part and reversed in part.

Felony stalking and Protective Order violations, communication, venue
State v. Kendall, 300 Kan. 515, 331 P.3d 763 (2014).

Kendall was convicted of both stalking and violating a Protective Order based on phone calls he placed while incarcerated to his former wife who had a Protection Order against him. The order prohibited Kendall from telephoning, contacting or otherwise communicating with his former wife. Kendall’s calls were never answered, and the victim never spoke with him. Through the caller ID number on her phone, she believed that Kendall was making the phone calls from prison.

■ Issue: An act of communication

Kendall appealed the stalking conviction on the basis that because the calls were never completed, the state presented insufficient evidence to support that he engaged in an “act of communication,” as required by statute.

Kansas Court of Appeals

The Court of Appeals held that the defendant had not communicated with the victim because there was not a shared understanding of the message between the sender and the recipient and therefore reversed the conviction of stalking but found there was sufficient evidence to support that he attempted to communicate.

Kansas Supreme Court

The Kansas Supreme Court reversed, finding that an “act of communication” requires a showing that the sender transmitted a communication to the victim, not merely an attempt at communicating. Further, stalking requires the victim to be placed in fear and that fear to be reasonable. These elements are not met if the victim is not aware that the perpetrator is trying to contact them. Therefore, the court concluded, “the phrase ‘act of communication’ as used in the stalking statute requires evidence that a perpetrator transmitted a communication to a victim.” at p. 769. In this case, the Kansas Supreme Court found that “Kendall’s acts of placing calls to [the victim]’s cell phone ... and, in turn, [victim] realizing that Kendall was calling her from prison were sufficient to show Kendall engaged in an act of communication. Based on [victim]’s testimony, a reasonable fact finder could infer that by calling [victim]’s cell phone, Kendall was communicating to [victim]—just as he promised at sentencing—that he would contact her no matter what, regardless of the Protective Order put in place or the fact that he was in prison, and that this message was received by [the victim].” at pp. 771-772.

■ Issue: Proper venue when a crime includes two or more acts

Kendall also appealed the conviction of a Protective Order violation because he was incarcerated in Butler County at the time of the violation but was prosecuted in Reno County.

Kansas Court of Appeals

The Kansas Court of Appeals found that the proper venue for prosecuting him for the crime could be where the call originated or where it was received.

Kansas Supreme Court

The Kansas Supreme Court affirmed the conviction, noting that “K.S.A. 22-2602 authorizes the State to prosecute a crime in the county where the crime was committed. But, when two or more acts are requisite to the commission of the crime charged and such acts occurred in different counties, K.S.A. 22-2603 authorizes the State to prosecute the crime ‘in any county in which any of such acts occur.’” at p. 774. The victim testifies that she was in Reno County when she received the calls on her cell phone. The Court concluded that the violation could be prosecuted in either the county where Kendall made the contact or the county where the victim received the contact.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

Protection From Stalking order one year extension, statutory amendment retroactive application

Dester v. Dester, 50 Kan. App. 2d 914, 335 P.3d 119 (2014).

Plaintiff was granted a second one-year extension of her final Protection From Stalking order (PFS) in 2013 based on statutory changes to the Protection From Stalking Act in July 2012. The legislature revised the extension language from, “for up to one additional year” to “for an additional year.” at p. 121. The defendant appealed the second extension of a final order, claiming the district court lacked jurisdiction and that if applied retroactively, his substantive rights of freedom of speech and freedom of movement would be affected. Specifically, the Court of Appeals of Kansas considered whether the 2012 amendments to the Protection From Stalking Act apply retroactively to orders already in place at the time of the amendment.

- Generally, a statute applies prospectively “unless (1) the statutory language clearly indicates the legislature intended the statute to operate retrospectively or (2) the change is procedural or remedial in nature, not substantive.” at p. 122.
- The Court found that the revisions did not create a new or eliminate an existing right, but “proscribed a method of enforcing a previously existing right, i.e., the right not to be stalked.” at p. 123. The Court therefore found that the amendment was procedural or remedial in nature.
- An amendment that is procedural or remedial may not be applied retroactively if that amendment would affect a party’s substantive rights. The defendant did not argue that the restrictions on freedom of speech or freedom of movement in the original PFS violated his substantive rights, only that they were violated by the addition of another year. The Court found that the defendant does “not have a vested right in stalking or harassing anyone, nor does he have a vested right in not having a PFS order entered against him for an additional year. The limited restrictions on the defendant’s freedom of speech and freedom of movement are narrowly tailored under the Act and . . . the amendments, which simply allow a Protective Order to be continued beyond the original 2-year limitation, are minimally restrictive when compared to the public interest at stake—the need to protect victims of stalking.” at pp. 123-124.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

PFA on behalf of grandchildren; grandparent visitation orders in PFAs

Baker v. McCormick 52 Kan. App. 2d 899, 380 P.3d 706 (2016)

Maggie McCormick who had two children, one by her current husband and one by an ex-boyfriend, was living with her parents after fleeing violence at the hands of her husband Ryan McCormick. Maggie’s father, and the father of Maggie’s first child, jointly filed a Protection From Abuse Petition against Ryan McCormick on behalf of the children. At the time of the filing Maggie and the children were living with Maggie’s parents, but after Maggie found out about the PFA, she and the children moved to her sister’s house. The district court judge ruled that Maggie’s father was not authorized to bring the issue on behalf of his grandchildren, because they no longer resided with him as required by statute. The district court then dismissed Austin’s petition, because he declined to prove that Ryan had abused the child as required by the statute. Additionally, the district court declined to issue any grandparent visitation orders as it held them to be inappropriate for a PFA action. Both Plaintiffs appealed these orders.

- The Kansas Court of Appeals ruled that so long as the children were residing with the adult who filed the petition on their behalf, at the time of the filing, the court would retain jurisdiction over the issue and the adult would remain authorized by the PFAA to pursue a PFA Order.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

- The general rule is that a court’s jurisdiction is determined at the time of the filing, not by later events:
 - “Changes taking place after filing shouldn’t deprive the court of jurisdiction in a PFA case, especially since we are to interpret the Protection From Abuse Act liberally to provide access to the courts to seek protection.”
- Grandparent visitation rights are not appropriate in a PFA action, unless there is a question of custody or residential placement based on a child’s need for protection.
 - Grandparent visitation rights may, however, be litigated in a divorce or paternity action.

Violation of a no contact order; Violation of PFA

State v. Hendricks 52 Kan. App. 2d 737, 372 P.3d 437 (2016).

Hendricks appealed his criminal conviction for violation of a Protection Order (no contact order entered in his divorce case). The order in question was granted years after the final divorce decree was entered. Hendricks argues that the Violation of a Protection Order statute, making it a crime to violate certain Protection Orders, did not apply to him because the order was neither a Protection From Abuse, Protection From Stalking, nor a temporary order issued in the divorce case.

- The criminal statute, Violation of a Protection Order, was not applicable to him because the Protection Order issued against him was not a qualifying order under the state. The conviction was set aside.

Bodily injury requirement of PFA; Hearing and notice requirements for extensions

Kerry G. v. Stacy C. 53 Kan. App. 2d 218, 386 P.3d 921 (2016).

The Protection From Abuse Act requires that one or more acts defined as abusive occur between intimate partners or household members. The defendant conceded that the evidence showed that the parties had been intimate partners. The petitioner argued that the evidence was insufficient to show that he had committed unwanted sexual acts. Secondly, he argued that even if the court found sufficient evidence of unwanted sexual acts, those acts did not constitute “bodily injury” as required to satisfy the abuse element under the Protection From Abuse Act. Three involuntary sexual encounters took place between the petitioner and defendant.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

- The court concluded that the unwanted sexual contact caused bodily injury, satisfying the abuse element under the Protection From Abuse Act.
- In Kerry G. v. Stacy C., 55 Kan. App. 2d 246, 411 P.3d 1227 (2018) the plaintiff made a motion to extend the previously granted PFA for an additional year. The district court granted Kerry’s request for a one-year extension without making any factual findings, and without giving Stacy, the defendant, notice or a hearing. Stacy appealed.
 - The Court of Appeals found that Stacy did have a right to notice and an opportunity to be heard before the court could issue an order extending the PFA for another year.
 - A motion for an extension of a Protection Order must be based on the individual facts of that case and the defendant must have proper notice. The extension was reversed and vacated.

Violation of a Protective Order; Stalking

State v. Sinzogan 53 Kan. App. 2d 324, 388 P.3d 176 (2017) review granted in part (Feb. 13, 2018).

The defendant appealed his jury conviction, claiming in relevant part, that the charge of violating a Protective Order and stalking are multiplicities. At the appellate hearing the defendant argued that violation of a Protective Order is a lesser included offense of stalking. A lesser included crime is defined as, “a crime where all elements of the lesser crime are identical to some of the elements of the crime charged.” K.S.A. 2015

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

Supp. 21- 5109(b)(2). The defendant thus argued that his conviction for both was multiplicities.

- The court disagreed, stating that the key distinction is the different culpable mental states.
- Violation of a Protective Order requires a knowing state of mind. K.S.A. 2015 Supp. 21-5924(a)(6).
- Stalking requires a lesser, reckless state of mind. K.S.A. 2015 Supp. 21- 5427(a)(3).
- The Court of Appeals found the violation of a Protective Order requires a higher culpable state of mind than stalking, and therefore a violation of a Protective Order cannot be a lesser included crime of stalking and the defendant was properly charged.

PFA; Violation of a PFA; Domestic violence designation

State v. Hunter, 387 Kan. App. P.3d 863 (2017) petition for review denied (Aug. 31, 2017) (unpublished opinion).

The defendant was convicted by a jury of two counts of violating a Protection From Abuse order. In relevant part, defendant appeals, claiming that the district court erred by failing to include all of the elements of the crime in the jury instruction and by designating his convictions as domestic violence offenses. The domestic violence designation is applied by applying the following process: “(1) If there is evidence in a criminal case that the offense in question is a domestic violence offense, the trier of fact shall determine whether the offense is indeed one of domestic violence; (2) If that determination is made, the district court shall place a domestic violence designation on the case; (3) If that designation is applied, the defendant shall be subject to a domestic violence assessment and shall follow its recommendations as part of his or her sentence.” State v. Gordon, 50 Kan. App. 2d 1177, Syl. 2, 337 P.3d 720 (2014), rev denied 302 Kan. 1015 (2015).

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

- Because a domestic violence jury instruction was not given, the trier of fact did not determine that the defendant had committed an act of domestic violence.
- The Court of Appeals determined that the district court erred when making the domestic violence determination at sentencing, as it was not the trier of fact. This portion of the district court's order was vacated.

PFA with children; extension of a PFA

Dreiling v. Dreiling, 394 Kan. App. P.3d 150 (2017).

Appealing the trial court's judgment extending a Protection From Abuse (PFA) order for an additional 2 years, the Responded contends that the trial court improperly failed to exercise its discretionary authority to consider his motion to exclude his minor children from the PFA order. The July 2014 petition did not allege that the defendant injured, attempted to injure, physically threatened, or sexually abused their children. The extension was sought and granted based on allegations that the defendant had committed an aggravated burglary against the petitioner in 2014, citing "the court shall extend a Protective Order for not less than two additional years and may extend the Protective Order up to the lifetime of the defendant if the plaintiff establishes that the defendant had been convicted of a person felony against the plaintiff or someone in the plaintiff's household." The defendant further argued that the trial court had discretion to modify the order regardless of the extension.

- The trial judge improperly believed that he was barred from considering the motion to amend based on the "shall" language of K.S.A. 2015 Supp. 60- 3107(e)(2).
- The Kansas Court of Appeals reversed and remanded with directions to consider the motion to amend the order to exclude the minor children.

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

PFS, Constitutionality and purpose of statute

State v. Smith, No. 119, 919 (Kan. App. Sept 27, 2019).

Lisa A. Smith appeals the district court’s decision finding that she violated a PFS order issued on behalf of her neighbor, Jonathan Perez.

- The PFS order against Smith included a special prohibition against Smith making any direct or indirect disparaging statements in public regarding Perez being a child molester.
- While entering her residence, Smith told her husband who was standing in their driveway to come inside away from the pedophile. Perez and family heard and recorded that statement.
- Smith was charged with violating the PFS order and moved to dismiss, arguing the PFS order was unconstitutional, content-based restriction on her free speech rights, and that criminal prosecution under K.S.A. 2017 Supp. 21-5924 for violating the order was unconstitutional as applied to her.
- She appealed on the same constitutional claims, and argued insufficient evidence showed that her statement was made in public.
- The State asserts the constitutional claim is an impermissible collateral attack on the earlier PFS order, and State questions whether the PFS order is a content-based restriction.
- The purpose of the protection from stalking statute, and the underlying stalking statute, is to protect innocent citizens from threatening conduct that subjects them to a reasonable fear of physical harm.
- The statute’s purpose is legitimate: to protect innocent citizens from intentional or knowingly threatening conduct that subjects them to a reasonable fear of physical harm.

Kansas Protection Order Manual

Section 9: Kansas Case Law

- The court held that the PFS order, as applied, restricts Smith’s speech based on its content in advance of its actual expression, so it is presumptively unconstitutional.

No temporary order shall have the effect of modifying an existing order granting legal custody, residency, visitation or parenting time unless there is sworn testimony at a hearing to support a showing of good cause. (c) If a hearing under subsection (a) is continued, the court may make or extend such temporary orders under subsection (b) as it deems necessary.

(2) Granting possession of the residence or household to the plaintiff to the exclusion of the defendant, and further restraining the defendant from entering or remaining upon or in such residence or household, subject to the limitation of subsection (d). Such order shall contain a statement that if such order is violated, such violation shall constitute criminal trespass as defined in subsection (a)(1)(C) of K.S.A. 2012 Supp. 21-5808, and amendments thereto, and violation of a protective order as defined in K.S.A. 2012 Supp. 21-5924, and amendments thereto. On the motion of the plaintiff, the court may extend the effect of such order for 12 months.
 - (7) Awarding costs and attorney fees to either party.
 - (8) Making provision for the possession of personal property of the parties and ordering a law enforcement officer to assist in securing possession of that property, if necessary.
 - (9) Requiring any person against whom an order is issued to seek counseling to aid in the cessation of abuse.
 - (10) Ordering or restraining any other acts deemed necessary to promote the safety of the plaintiff or of any minor children of the parties.

both the plaintiff and the defendant and determined that both parties acted primarily as aggressors and neither party acted primarily in self-defense. (c) Any order entered under the protection from abuse act shall not be subject to modification on ex parte application or on motion for temporary orders in any action filed pursuant to K.S.A. 60-1601 et seq., prior to their transfer or repeal, or article 22 or 27 of chapter 23 of the Kansas Statutes Annotated, and amendments thereto, or K.S.A. 38-1101 et seq., and amendments thereto. Orders previously issued in an action filed pursuant to K.S.A. 60-1601 et seq., prior to their transfer or repeal, or article 22 or 27 of chapter 23 of the Kansas Statutes Annotated, and amendments thereto, or K.S.A. 38-1101 et seq., and amendments thereto, shall be subject to modification under the protection from abuse act only as to those matters subject to modification by the terms of K.S.A. 2012 Supp. 23-2712, 23-2715, 23-2716, 23-2802, 23-2902 through 23-2905, 23-3001 through 23-3006, 23-3201 through 23-3207, 23-3216 and 23-3218, and amendments thereto, and on sworn testimony to support a showing of good cause. Immediate and present danger of abuse to the plaintiff or minor children shall constitute good cause. If an action is filed pursuant to K.S.A. 2012 Supp. 23-2712, 23-2715, 23-2716, 23-2802, 23-2902 through 23-2905, 23-3001 through 23-3006, 23-3201 through 23-3207, 23-3216 and 23-3218, and amendments thereto, during the pendency of a proceeding filed under the protection from abuse act or while an order issued under the protection from abuse act is in effect, the court, on final hearing or on agreement of the parties, may issue final orders authorized by K.S.A. 2012 Supp. 23-2712, 23-2715, 23-2716, 23-2802, 23-2902 through 23-2905, 23-3001 through 23-3006, 23-3201 through 23-3207, 23-3216 and 23-3218, and amendments thereto, that are inconsistent with orders entered under the protection from abuse act. Any inconsistent order entered pursuant to this subsection shall be specific in its terms, reference the protection from abuse order and parts thereof being modified and a copy thereof shall be filed in both actions. The court shall consider whether the actions should be consolidated in accordance with K.S.A. 60-242, and amendments thereto. Any custody or parenting time order, or order relating to the best interests of a child, issued pursuant to the revised Kansas code for care of children or the revised Kansas juvenile justice code, shall be binding and shall take precedence over any such custody or parenting order involving the same child issued under the protection from abuse act, until jurisdiction under the revised Kansas code for care of children or the revised Kansas juvenile justice code is terminated. Any inconsistent custody or parenting order issued in the revised Kansas code for care of children case or the revised Kansas juvenile justice code case shall be specific in its terms, reference any preexisting protection from abuse order and the custody being modified, and a copy of such order shall be filed in the preexisting protection from abuse case.

(d) If the parties to an action under the protection from abuse act are not married to each other and one party owns the residence or household, the court shall not have the authority to grant possession of the residence or household under subsection (a)(2) to the exclusion of the party who owns it.

(e) Subject to the provisions of subsections (b), (c) and (d), a protective order or approved consent agreement shall remain in effect until modified or dismissed by the court and shall be for a fixed period of time not to exceed one year, except as provided in subsection (e)(1) and (e)(2).

(1) Upon motion of the plaintiff, such period may be extended for an additional period of not less than one year and not more than three years.

(2) Upon verified motion of the plaintiff and after the defendant has been personally served with a copy of the motion and has had an opportunity to present evidence and cross-examine witnesses at a hearing on the motion, the court shall extend a protective order for not less than one additional year and may extend the protective order up to the lifetime of the defendant if the court determines by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant has: (A) Violated a valid protection order; (B) previously violated a valid protection order; or (C) been convicted of a person felony or any conspiracy, criminal solicitation or attempt thereof, under the laws of Kansas or the laws of any other jurisdiction which are substantially similar to such person felony, committed against the plaintiff or any member of the plaintiff's household. No service fee shall be required for a motion filed pursuant to this subsection. (f) The court may amend its order or agreement at any time upon motion filed by either party.

(g) No order or agreement under the protection from abuse act shall in any manner affect title to any real property.

60-31b03. Judicial enforcement of order. (a) A person authorized by the law of this state to seek enforcement of a protection order may seek enforcement of a valid protection order in a court of this state. The court shall enforce the terms of the protection order, including terms that provide relief that a court of this state would lack power to provide but for this section. The court shall enforce the order, whether the order was obtained by independent action or in another proceeding, if it is an order issued in response to a complaint, petition or motion filed by or on behalf of an individual seeking protection. In a proceeding to enforce a foreign protection order, the court shall follow the procedures of this state for the enforcement of protection orders.

(b) A court of this state may not enforce a foreign protection order issued by a tribunal of a state that does not recognize the standing of a protected individual to seek enforcement of that order.

- (2) is currently in effect;

For the purposes of this section, the protection order may be inscribed on a tangible medium or may have been stored in an electronic or other medium if it is retrievable in perceivable form. Presentation of a certified copy of a protection order is not required for enforcement.

(b) If a foreign protection order is not presented, a law enforcement officer of this state may consider other information in determining whether there is probable cause to believe that a valid foreign protection order exists.

Section 10: Kansas Statutes

(c) If a law enforcement officer of this state determines that an otherwise valid foreign protection order cannot be enforced because the respondent has not been notified or served with the order, the officer shall inform the respondent of the order, make a reasonable effort to serve the order upon the respondent and allow the respondent a reasonable opportunity to comply with the order before enforcing the order.

(d) Registration or filing of an order in this state is not required for the enforcement of a valid foreign protection order pursuant to this act.
